Biographical/Historical Sketch

Implemented during the Civil War, the Emancipation Proclamation declared that slaves held in states that had seceded from the Union would be free. President Abraham Lincoln issued the preliminary proclamation on September 22, 1862 as formal notice to the Confederate states of his intention to free the slaves. The final proclamation was issued on January 1, 1863. Emancipation was not extended to slaves residing in Union states until the end of 1865.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains a 9.75 x 14.25 in. broadside. It features the text of the preliminary Emancipation Proclamation issued September 22, 1862, and the final proclamation signed into effect on January 1, 1863. A quotation from Confederate Vice President Alexander H. Stephens calling slavery "the chief stone of the corner in our new edifice," is included at the bottom.
