

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry, no matter how small, should be recorded to ensure the integrity of the financial data. This includes not only sales and purchases but also expenses and income. The text suggests that a systematic approach to record-keeping is essential for identifying trends and making informed decisions.

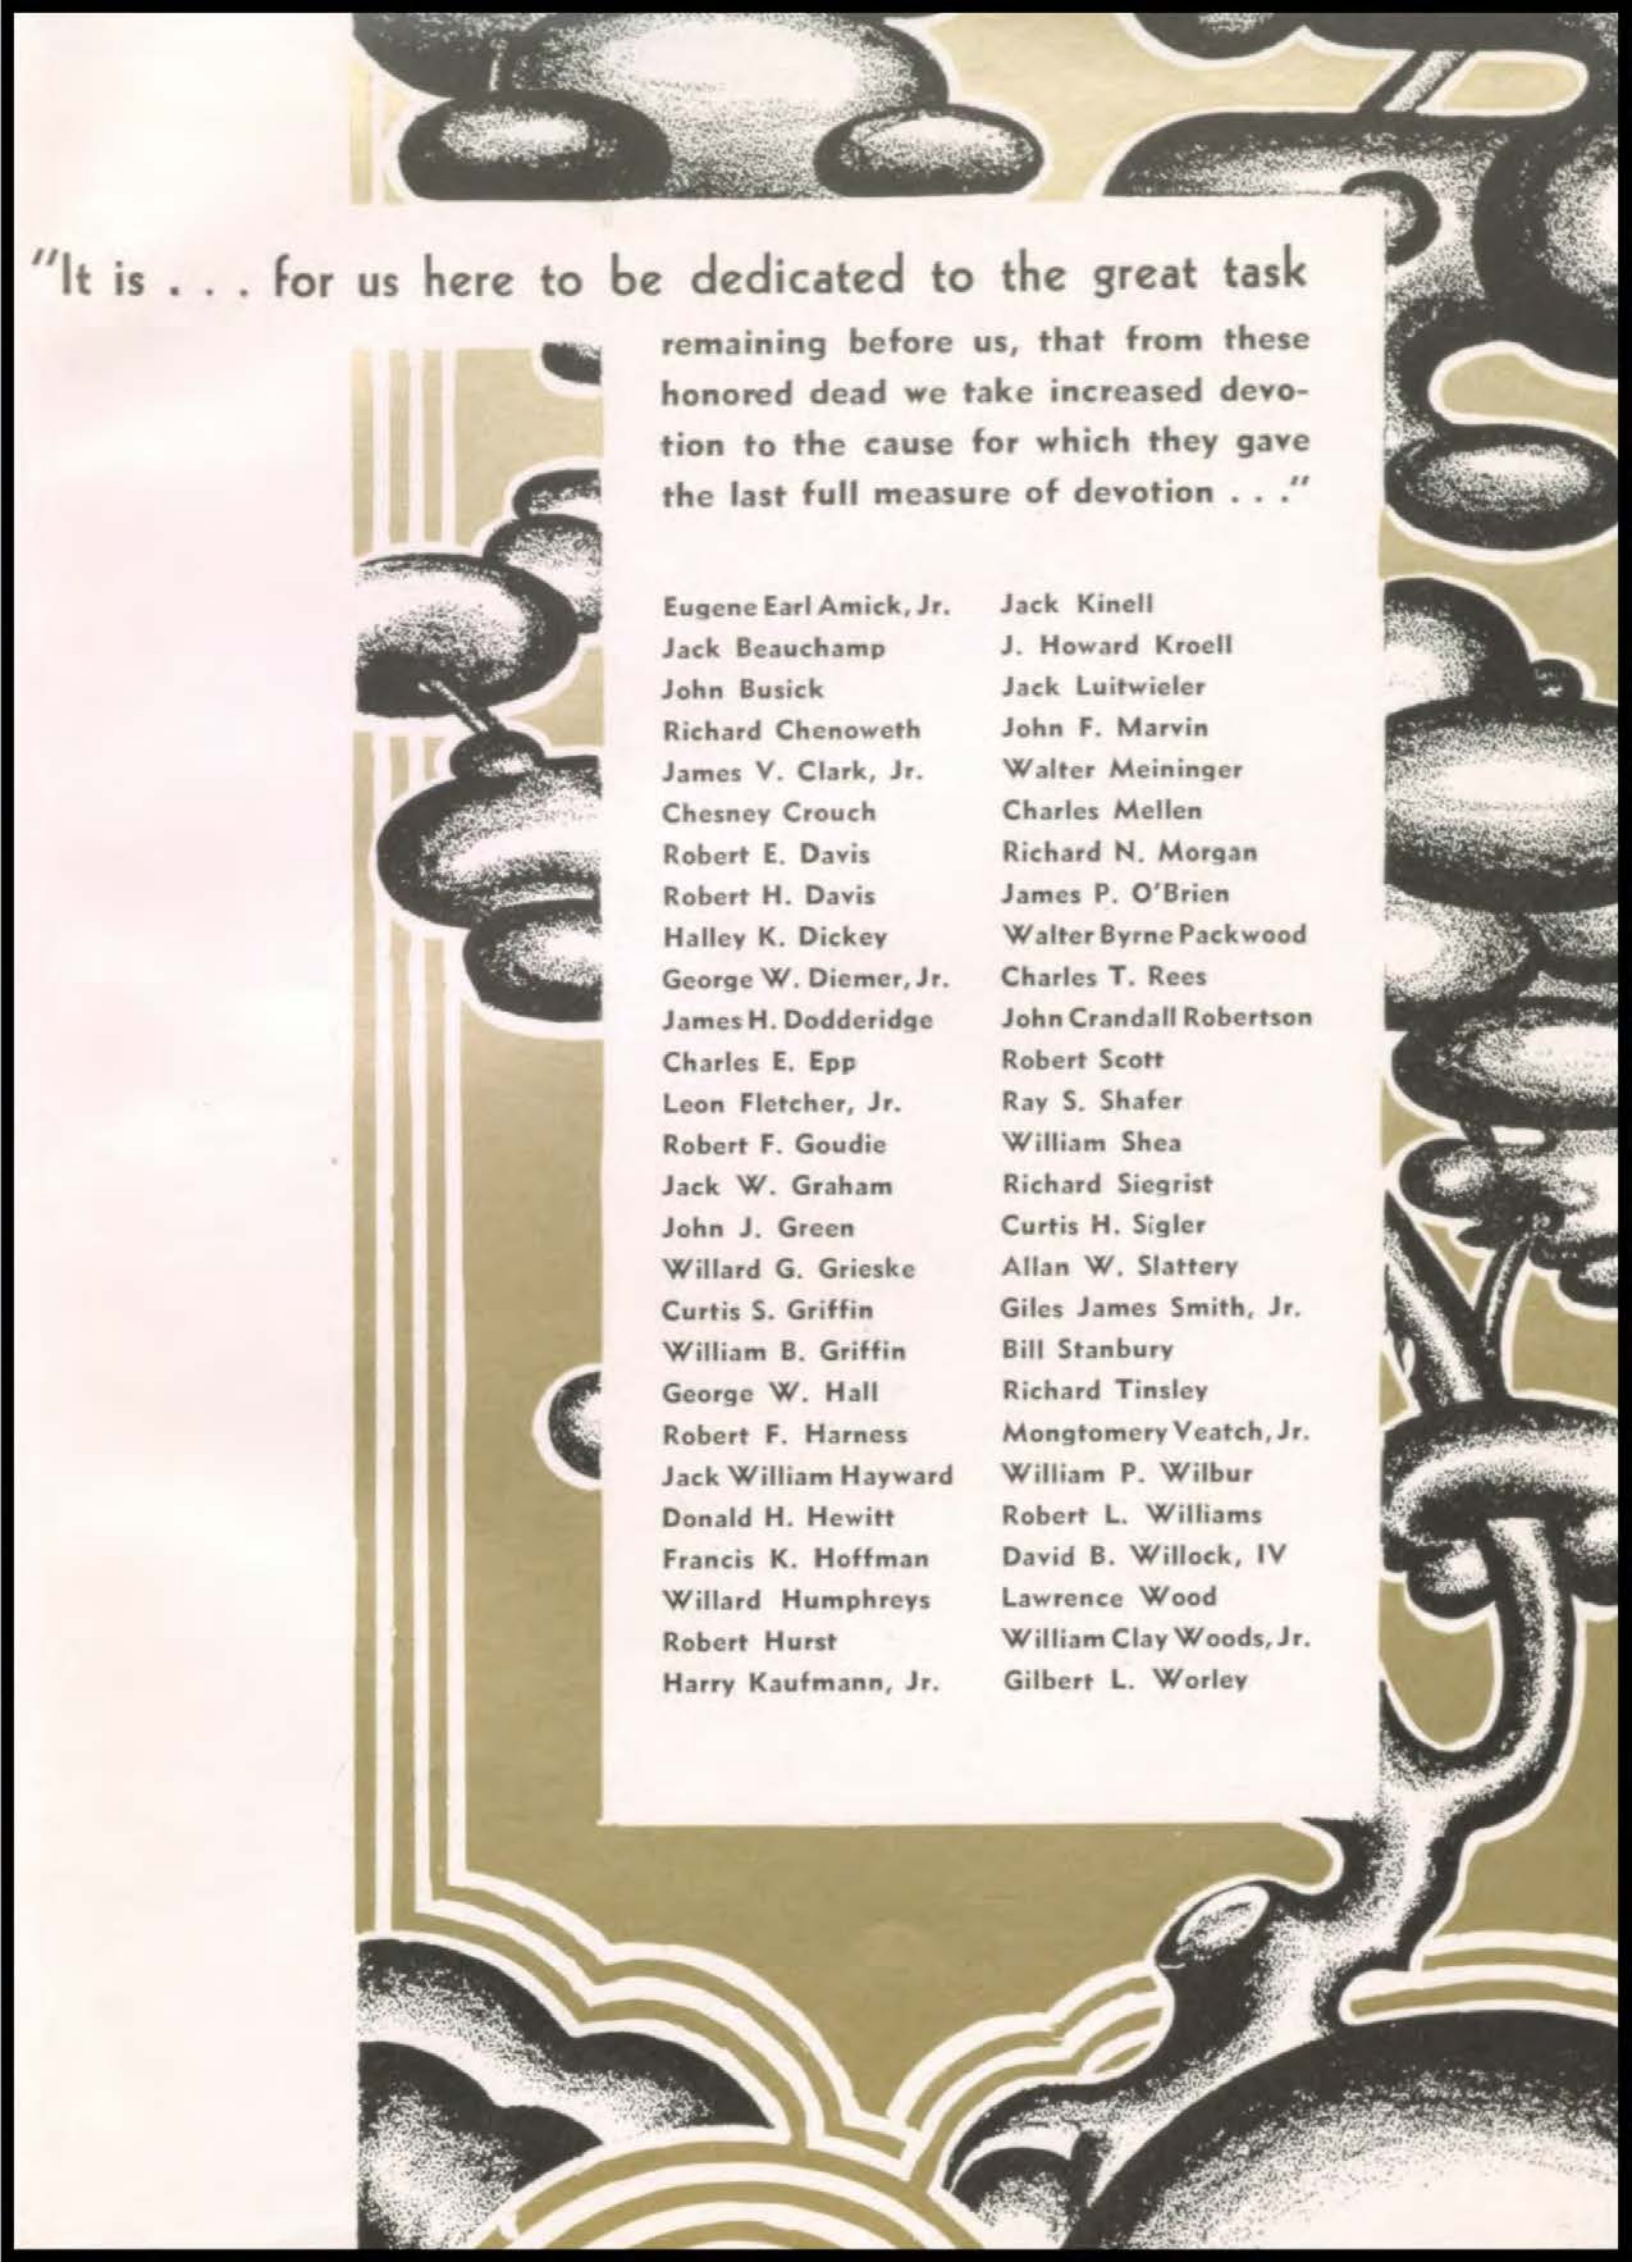

Next, the document addresses the issue of budgeting. It explains that a well-defined budget is a critical tool for managing resources and controlling costs. By setting clear financial goals and limits, individuals and organizations can avoid overspending and ensure that their financial plans are realistic and achievable. The text provides practical advice on how to create a budget that works for your specific needs and circumstances.

The third section focuses on the importance of regular financial reviews. It argues that periodic assessments of your financial health are necessary to catch potential problems early and make adjustments as needed. This could involve comparing actual performance against budgeted figures or analyzing cash flow trends. The document encourages a proactive mindset, suggesting that regular reviews can help you stay on top of your finances and avoid surprises.

Finally, the document touches upon the role of technology in modern financial management. It highlights how various software solutions and digital tools can streamline processes, reduce errors, and provide valuable insights through data analysis. While technology is a powerful aid, the text also stresses the importance of understanding the underlying principles and maintaining a level of manual oversight to ensure accuracy and security.

"It is . . . for us here to be dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion . . ."

As war grows old
And peace draws near,
We seek to mold,
On hatred's bier,
A lasting peace;

In every field to extend the scope
Of understanding, our one hope;
To try to follow—if need be—
Or lead without timidity;

When engaged in sport's contests for fame,
To remember fairness, then acclaim;

To increase the zest in life through Art
And culture which it will impart;

When work is done, sometimes before,
To laugh for a little while, or more;

Then, filled with fire
Of confidence,
May we inspire
Mankind's assent
To lasting peace.

*To the

of Southwest:*

With the end of this year two decades of Southwest High School history will be completed. Obviously, therefore, this edition of the Sachem not only records the many activities and happy associations of this year, but also reflects the best ideas and ideals that have developed through the years past. Every year there have been treasures and triumphs added to the possessions of the school. So, naturally, Southwest now has many fine traditions, splendid accomplishments, and cherished associations. Additional contributions are being made this year which will be appreciated in the future. Indeed, it can be said that again Southwest has not failed to build a "more stately mansion" as this busy year has taken its place in the history of events.

Since the opening of Southwest in 1925, Mr. R. V. Hill, who retired last year from the teaching profession, earnestly and successfully guided his students through the intricacies of physics and mathematics. All who knew him recognized his brilliant scholarship, his integrity of character, and his unswerving loyalty to his ideals. He won the love and admiration of his students and the respect of his fellow-teachers. Now that he has the freedom to follow the inclination of his heart, to enjoy the outdoor world which he loves, we, deeply sorry that he has left us, wish him long years of happiness.

Mr. W. Lawrence Cannon, teacher of science and mathematics, left us at the close of the first semester this year to become vice-principal of Paseo High School. As sponsor of the Student Council for many years, he guided the student body of our school through numerous trials and more numerous successes. By precept and example he taught us courtesy, tolerance, and loyalty, as well as efficiency in meeting our responsibilities. In both curricular and extra-curricular activities he always went to bat for us. In appreciation, we say to him from the depths of every heart, "Good luck, Mr. Cannon, and thank you."

ENGLISH

For a rounded education, no study can take precedence over that of English, our own tongue. By mastering its fundamentals, we develop the power of expressing what we think and feel. Through reading, we gain not only greater understanding of humanity, but also real personal enjoyment. Shakespeare, Tennyson, and others offer the intellectual pleasures which raise life above the commonplace.

COMMERCE

Amid the clack of typewriters and the swirl of pencils, our Southwest Indian enters into the field of commercial work. Strange curliques and long columns of figures take real meaning under the pencils of our business students. Courses in typing, bookkeeping, and shorthand prepare them for the progressive world of business.

FINE ARTS

Music! speech! painting! the fine arts! From these few roots stem the culture of the world from ancient Chinese painted silk to surrealist fantasies and technicolor movies. We, the youth, must emphasize the study of these fine arts to build and preserve a truly American culture.

LANGUAGE

At Christmas time, when all the classes were rejoicing, the lyrics of carols sung in six languages were wafted through the halls of Southwest. This proves that the language teachers are competently doing their jobs of presenting their courses in French, German, Spanish, and Latin and making them live.

MATHEMATICS

To keep up with military needs for skilled technicians, the mathematics department at Southwest must now emphasize each of its courses. Triangles, thought problems, the Pythagorean theorem, parallelograms, and logarithms are just a few intricacies that keep the Indian brain cells working overtime.

MECHANICAL AND HOUSEHOLD ARTS

Around about Southwest, we see more and more students sporting identification bracelets and hair clips. Asked where they get the jewelry, they answer, "We made it." Anyone gets a thrill from his own manual accomplishments, whether they be apple pies or furniture. As we realize the joy of working with our hands, the practical arts classes are growing and growing.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION

"Hup, two, three, four." It might be the R.O.T.C. drilling or the gym classes working out. It might be boys; it might be girls. You never know around Southwest, for everyone takes his part in carrying the name of the school to fame by athletic triumphs or military feats.

SCIENCE

Southwest students see tiny animal life squirming under the relentless eye of the microscope, observe electric sparks, and experiment with all sorts of chemical compounds. They study the whole natural world, the ever-mysterious realm of science, so that, by the knowledge of fundamentals, they may help make possible finer, more beneficial lives for mankind.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

In our democracy, each citizen has responsibility for the success of the nation. As we students shall soon become the voting citizens of the United States, we, by the study of the problems throughout the history of the world, may now prepare ourselves to understand better and execute more wisely the duties of governing a democracy.

CLASS of 1945

War has dominated the thoughts and activities of the world during our brief existence at Southwest. All four of our years have been war years, years of challenge to the youth of America, and especially to us, the graduating class of 1945. We shall meet that challenge in our united efforts to achieve victory, some by actual service in the armed forces, some in other fields of endeavor.

At the same time, an atmosphere of normalcy has pervaded our halls. This may not seem in keeping with the times; but perhaps this air of security and regularity will not seem to have been amiss when, after the war, the clean, intelligent young people of today will effect a just and permanent peace. Then, we of the senior class will be prepared to meet and cope successfully with the problems and demands of the all-important future.

HONORS

Three honor societies offer recognition to Southwest students for outstanding work in particular fields. To students interested in literary work, Quill and Scroll upholds a goal of high achievement. Those who specialize in art may work toward the standards of the Art Honor Society. The National Honor Society is the mark of a well-balanced student — one who is a leader, and a sincere worker — and is one of the highest honors to be attained at Southwest. Southwest is proud of the students who are worthy of these honors.

SERVICE

Service organizations do a great deal for the school in endeavoring to make life at Southwest as efficient and enjoyable as possible. Foremost among these are the Student Council, which sponsors the cafeteria courtesy committee and the Scalpers Club, and the Junior Red Cross Council. Business transactions are speeded by the office and war stamp assistants, and the health-center functions efficiently with the aid of student helpers. We appreciate the faithful service of these students.

FIRST SEMESTER

SOCIETIES

Societies at Southwest offer both inspiration and social enjoyment to students with similar interests. Through literary, engineering, crafts, home economic, and social service clubs, students form new interests and ideas and gain valuable experience in parliamentary procedure. These organizations are sponsored by efficient and able teachers, who devote much of their time and energy to aiding the club members to learn more and to find higher ideals in their particular fields.

FIRST AND TEN

Forecasting a light but speedy squad, Coach Louis House produced just that to lead Southwest's charges through 1944 gridiron battle. Claiming only three vets in Jack Halper, Don Nickell, and Cliff Ward, the Warriors opened their season with a hot streak that lost its sting toward mid-season.

The Braves introduced themselves to competition against Manual on the home turf. In their return to football after a lapse of several years, the Manualites

CAPTAIN DON NICKELL

Don's ability as a pass-snagger and rugged defensive end, was the basis of his election to a first team All-Star berth. This, his second year as a letterman, brought him the honorary team captaincy.

FIRST TEAM

were unmercifully beaten, 64-0. Eubank and Wald led the goalward parade to one of the highest totals ever tallied by an Indian machine.

League play, opening against Paseo, held up the Southwest power talk. Hitting pay dirt a play before halftime, the Bucs took their first and only lead. The Redskin drive came to life in the final half as Eubank and Nickell added three touchdowns to the Brave total before the final gun to leave the Pirates on the short end of a 20-6 count.

The Westport tilt seemed to cut off Indian power as the Tiger line held to a standstill. The Braves cashed in early on a short drive for a lead only to have it erased by the Tiger aerial artists. Passing through the weak Southwest defense, the Bengals drove to a quick score for a 6-all final deadlock.

Catching the Northeast Vikings in the hot streak of their unpredictable season, the Braves, minus their starting tackles, were thrown for a resounding 18-0 setback. The Norsemen's line-busting backs proved to be the deciding factors.

Ward, boasting one of the city's heaviest elevens, proved its strength in running off with an 18-6 non-league triumph.

Southeast, after losing its initial game, came back to turn back all other opposition for a title tie. The Braves, failing to score, fell 19-0.

As a result of poor offensive and defensive play, Southwest dropped before Central's lowly Eagles, 7-0, thus landing in the cellar with their conquerors.

East, coming back from its first defeat, trampled a hapless Indian eleven, 25-7. Even in defeat the aerial combination of Whitacre to Nickell highlighted the play.

The season's end found the team electing stellar wingman, Don Nickell, into honorary captaincy. The league All-Star team picked "Nick" at a first team end position while Eubank and Cliff Ward took second team berths. Rusty Baltis, center, and Cecil Chappelow, guard, were voted as honorable mention.

SECOND TEAM FOOTBALL

Outshining their big brothers again this year were the second squad footballers, who went through an undefeated season to take top honors. Copping the title with five wins and a tie, Coach Francis Mann's boys displayed fine ability and hustle.

As they downed the Paseo Buclets by a 20-6 margin, the Papooses opened their victory string with a powerhouse barrage.

Giving the seconds their only real scare of the season, the Tiger Cubs of Westport duelled the Bravelets to a 13-13 tie. An opponent rally late in the game brought the deadlock.

Northeast proved very little competition as it fell to the wayside before a 39-0 tornado. The Soph quartet of pony backs sparked the winner's drive with their consistent long dashes.

After trailing the Southeast Knights for three quarters, a fourth period march goalward accounted for an 18-13 win.

Central's seconds proved to be a tough obstacle during the first half, but couldn't stop the Bravelet steam roller after halftime. The Soph backs again poured it on to lead the team to a well earned victory.

In their last game of the season, the team traveled to East to rack up their highest total of the year in blanketing the Bear Cubs under a 41-0 uprising.

With the splendid showing put on by this year's second team, outlooks for 1945 seem hopeful for a fine first squad. Those boys receiving second team letters at the gridiron season's end were: Jim Bower, Peter Bowers, Bud Buffer, Bill Chase, Bob Conklin, Bob Danneberg, Bill Delay, Rex Dunivent, Pat Farrell, Moulton Green, Alan Jewell, Phil Klein, Don Maffry, Howard Nearing, Herb Overton, Don Owens, Bill Paxton, Charles Robinson, Henry Rollert, Jim Schmidt, Emil Schutzel, Banny Tapp, Bill Toro, Dixon Vance, and Dick Yohe. Bob Fountain and Joe Bryan served in the capacity of student managers.

SECOND TEAM

LETTERMEN

GRAM . . . Dick's consistent hustle served as a team morale-builder. Specializing on defense, he always was in the midst of a scramble.

LANE . . . A constant threat to the opposition, this end's fine play was a definite factor in Southwest's victories.

TROTTER . . . A reserve letterman from last year's eleven, Tom's play gained recognition as a fine end.

SMITH . . . Lending speed to the defense, Gene often caught opponents behind the line of scrimmage. Driving under punts proved to be his specialty.

BRUCE . . . This junior bone-crusher, from his tackle post, became a stonewall to enemy rushes. Much of the opponents' lost ground can be awarded Bob.

BARNETT . . . At tackle, this big, junior Redskin held down a stellar position on this year's heavy line.

HURWITZ . . . Roger's play at tackle was the rugged type. After being injured in the Westport tilt, he saw plenty of action later in the season.

LUTHER . . . Another returning reserve letterman, Tal showed hardiness and endurance which made him a valuable addition to the squad.

NICKEL . . . Playing at tackle, Frank, through his ability to stop enemy rushes, received his first team berth.

CHAPPELOW . . . The team's best defensive lineman, Cecil never missed a tackle from his guard position. For his fine play, he received an honorable mention All-Star rating.

McCARTY . . . Jack saw an ample share of duty at guard and proved his worth as an effective lineman, both offensive and defensive.

SAFFELL . . . Fighting up from the second team, Bill, by mid-season, had earned a starting guard position. Having left town, this junior will be lost to next year's team.

SOLOMON . . . Only a sophomore, "Jud" saw his share of action at guard. He proved an addition to the shock-absorbing center of the line.

WARD . . . Another Indian to win a second team All-Star berth, Cliff, one of the team's most rugged individuals, played consistently superior ball at guard.

BALTIS . . . As a cool center, Rusty's brand of ball earned him an honorable mention All-Star award. Good, steady football characterized his play.

SHARTEL . . . "Shar" carried his brunt of battle from his snapper-back post. A tall, lanky lad, his defensive line-backing was sparkling.

CORNELIUS . . . Despite being the squad's smallest member, Clint's passing talents and ability to bring down loose opponents played a part in every victory.

EUBANK . . . Stamped as one of the circuit's fastest backs, Bill led all Indian scorers in season play. His deceptiveness and power running earned him a second team All-Star ranking.

HALPER . . . A two-year letterman, "Hug" constituted part of the speedy Indian backfield. His fleet-footedness and general play made him a great addition to the team.

HIGGINS . . . From his halfback slot, Jack was one of the team's passers. His ability to hit downfield receivers added to his steady play.

MACKAY . . . As well as being the team's place-kicker, Bill broke away for more than one long jaunt throughout the season.

ROBISON . . . Jack filled his position at half as a timely passer and adept ball carrier.

SIME . . . A valuable asset to the 1944 ground-gaining machine, Dick proved an able ball-handler at halfback.

WALD . . . The fine punting ability of this senior fullback kept the Indians in the running of every game. A pile-driver, Bill did practically all the team's plunging.

WHITACRE . . . Quarterbacking this year's eleven, Jim's speed and driving power were the sparks of many a scoring drive.

Coach J. C. Cohlmeier, in his return to mentors circles, has done a splendid job in tutoring the 1945 team to second place in the league race. With a fine record behind him, Coach will, no doubt, keep up the high standard in his future Indian teams.

Coach H. O. Masters, who leads the Bravelets, has filled his post in good fashion and has formed promising material for the 1946 season. Under his leadership, the seconds gained vast experience which will be welcome in coming contests.

OFF THE BACKBOARDS

Finishing a strong second to the champion Northeast Vikings, the Southwest Indians, winning six of seven league games, have made a fine debut of the tutoring of new coach, J. C. Cohlmeier.

Pre-season contests spelled early victories for the Indian quintet. De La Salle and Washington Rural proved easy meat but Rockhurst was more stubborn. Southwest kept a bare second half lead to win narrowly, 22-20.

The opening of league competition found a nervous Redskin five fighting an uphill battle against the powerful Northeast Vikings. The Norsemen, who went on to become league champs, stressed rugged rebound play to win 33-30.

Hitting their early season form, the Indians had little trouble in downing a badly outstretched East five, 47-28. This triumph, Southwest's first, put us right in the thick of the title scramble.

Ending with a torrid final canto enabled the Warriors to overcome an early Central lead to win 38-27. The Eagles held a commanding 19-10 halftime advantage but the late spurt, led by Nickell's fourteen markers, turned defeat into victory.

Despite ragged play by both quintets, Southwest edged out a hustling Southeast squad 17-16. Never more than two points ever separated these rivals who fought up to the last seconds.

Behind for more than three quarters, the Ward Cyclones managed to cop the victory in an appended session, 31-29.

Returning to league play, the Paseo Pirates were the opponents. The Indian long-shot artists brought about the breaking of the Buc's closely-knit zone as final period swishers found Southwest victor, 32-22.

Jack Leathers, potting eighteen points, led the attack which topped Manual 50-36.

Expected to be a power outfit, Westport proved very little opposition as they fell 43-19 to a high-strung Brave squad.

A first All-Star berth went to stellar guard, George Bartlett, while second team positions placed Jack Leathers, team captain, and Don Nickell at guard positions.

Although not taking top position in their circuit, the seconds, under the guidance of Coach Herbert Masters, showed fine spirit and sportsmanship and should prove to be a leading contender in next year's title chase.

Two early victories opened play. Northeast and East were close-scoring victims as season prospects looked bright before Central's mighty Eaglets rolled up a 48-27 revenge triumph. Piling up an early advantage, a small but scrappy Southeast five garnered an easy 43-17 win. The sharp-eyed Knights hit a fine percentage to win laurels.

Another close tussle followed as Paseo's Buclets bowed, 26-23. Owens led the winner's attack to their fourth season win. Buclet guard, Zimmerman, tallied seventeen for high scoring honors.

Unable to hold Manual's husky quintet, a tight struggle found the Cubs on the short end of a 44-37 final count.

Westport thoroughly outplayed a badly beaten Papoose quintet to win the season's finale, 38-22.

Those boys receiving letters were Phil Booser, Jim Bower, Bill Chase, Phil Cohen, Moulton Green, Dick Houston, Phil Klein, Rolphe Lundgren, Herb Overton, Don Owens, Bill Polack, Banny Tapp, and Dixon Vance.

CAPTAIN LEATHERS . . . For his outstanding play at the forward post, Jack, a three-year letterman, was awarded second team All-Star rating and elected honorary captain of this year's team. His fine shooting ability made him a mainstay in every game.

Leathers

NICKELL . . . Playing guard for the second year, Don, as well as being the team's high scorer, was an exceptional rebounder. He was rated one of the league's steadiest defense men and received a guard position on the second All-Star team.

BARTLETT . . . The hustler of the squad, George played a consistently fine brand of ball throughout the season which earned him a first team All-Star berth. A junior, he will return next year.

TIMMONS . . . This sky-scraping Injun, playing at a forward position, was an aggres-

SEBREE . . . Playing an aggressive game at all times, Frank was often the spark of a scoring rally. His smooth ball handling qualified him as an able forward in any competition.

CORBETT . . . The tallest boy on the squad, Jim, a junior, was the team's center. His general play and rebounding were of great value to the team.

HALPER . . . A spark plug on the court, Jack, with his deceptive dribbling and passing, greatly helped the team. There was plenty of fight in this guard, the smallest and scrappiest on the squad.

DEUCE and ADD

Bringing the scalp once more to the home grounds, the Southwest Indian netmen, staging an all-Southwest singles and doubles finals, had little trouble in sweeping the Interscholastic League tennis title.

Frank Sebree, singles champ, trounced first-seeded Amos Roberts 6-1, 6-4 in the finals, while the top-seeded combination of Dick Phelps-Norman Apple succumbed to the champion Redskin soph, Brud Leiter and Harold Titus, 6-3, 6-4.

Sebree breezed through early rounds with little competition. He defeated Central 6-0, 6-0 before advancing to the semi-finals by default from East. Westport proved no match for the star Warrior raquetteer as the Tiger fell, 6-0, 6-2.

Up to the finals Roberts had been spectacular in the tournament. Westport and Paseo were both hopelessly trampled at 6-0, 6-0. His Southeast opponent had little to offer and fell by a 6-0, 6-2 score. The finals proved fatal as teammate Sebree's power play was too much, Frank winning 6-1, 6-4.

The Titus-Leiter duo ran over Westport to a 6-0, 6-3 tune before Paseo stiffened to take seven games but not enough for victory. A default victory followed along with the finals. An early lead was never lost as Apple-Phelps bogged down and lost 3-6, 4-6. The latter combination had considerable trouble advancing all the way. Paseo's scrappy team pushed their dual into three sets before being downed 4-6, 6-4, 3-6.

Coach Melvin Bishop produced a fine 1944 team and with three returning lettermen back next year, the future is bright.

DOWN the FAIRWAY

The 1944 edition of Southwest golfing kept up the fine record of the past few years. Slapping at par on the Swope Park No. 2 course, the team lived up to the expectations of Coach Melvin Bishop and performed nobly.

First call for golf enthusiasts found a host of forty boys touring the Armour Field links. Eight team members were chosen, the regular line-up consisting of Ray Binnicker, Richard Durham, Jim Neuner, and Marvin Yarmo, while the alternate four were Howard Johnson, Harlin Laner, George Matteson, and Dan Shafer.

Playing the league tournament off in four rounds found the Southeast Knights hauling off low score of 1,259 strokes. Southwest, in the runner-up role, trailed by 32 strokes at 1,291. Central's link artists managed to take third place followed by Paseo and Westport to round out the five competing schools.

This tournament occupied four days, October 17, 19, 24, and 26, at the end of which the individual scores were totaled to determine the winners.

Jim Neuner, team captain and sole returning letterman from last year's championship quartet, carded a fine 306 total to take the city tournament low-scoring honors. Bob Mithey of Southeast and Marvin Schuman of Paseo ended in a second place deadlock with a 307 stroke total.

At the season's end, Coach Melvin Bishop, who served as chairman of the Interscholastic League golf tournament, awarded letters to Captain Jim Neuner, Ray Binnicker, Richard Durham, and Marvin Yarmo.

A fine season completed with a fine record.

AROUND THE OVAL

Turning out to be one of the surprise units in Southwest track history, the 1944 cinder squad, after winning just three of five dual meets, went on to win the thirty-first annual Interscholastic League track and field meet. Southwest students have a right to feel proud of the showing put on by these city champs.

The Indian tracksters, opening the season with a thoroughly inexperienced squad, dropped a close meet to the Southeast Knights.

The East Bears, pushing on to an unbeaten dual season, chopped the Braves down to a 50-41 setback. Soggy turf enabled the Bears to cop most of the dashes and the meet.

Driving to their initial victory, Southwest, by taking clean sweeps in both the pole vault and the century, outscored Paseo's Pirates 60-31. An exciting relay ended the meet as the Brave anchor-man edged the tape to win and keep the relay slate clean.

Bill Hatch produced the sparkling performance in the Northeast meet with his fine shot heave of 44 feet, 2 inches. The Braves had little trouble in triumphing 51½-39½.

As the dual season ended, Central succumbed to the Redskins, 58-33.

Springing the season's upset, Southwest took top honors in the city meet, May 21, on the home oval. Ken Danneberg copped first place in the 440-yard dash with a good time of 52.1. Hatch out-distanced all competition in the shot put with his heave of 43 feet, 9¼ inches. Jim Fritz pulled the unexpected in grabbing first place in the broad jump before the Brave crack relay team, composed of Danneberg, Eubank, Moore, and Walker, cinched the meet with Southwest's fourth first. The meet ended with the Braves totaling 30¼ points as Central and Northeast filled the top three.

ARMY LIFE

The Southwest R.O.T.C. Battalion of the Kansas City High School Regiment again came up with a fine report this year, which does justice to the excellent records of the previous nineteen years of "army life" at our school. Southwest was honored this year by having the second ranking cadet in the regiment, the cadet Lt. Colonel. Previously it has had four cadet Colonels and four cadet Lt. Colonels.

Every year each R.O.T.C. battalion must undergo a government inspection. This takes place in the spring when the cadets are checked for their practical and theoretical knowledge of military subjects. For thirteen consecutive years, the cadets of Southwest Battalion have been privileged to wear the red star which denotes our high rank of "Honor School."

An event which is eagerly awaited by all from the beginning of school in the fall, is the annual Field Day. All battalions of the city compete for the position of the best drilled school. In its history, the Southwest Battalion has held five first places, four second places, and three third places.

Rifle marksmanship is an important part of the training. Through repeated and diligent practice on the rifle range, the rifle team this year ranked second among contesting teams in the Seventh Service Command Match.

Another side of the "army life" at Southwest is the social side, which was high-lighted this year by the annual R.O.T.C. Ball. A great deal of spirit was added to the battalion by this lively event.

The training received in R.O.T.C. helps greatly to discipline boys in high school. Much helpful information is gathered in the three-year course which will be of great value not only in a military, but also in any type of a civilian occupation as well.

To the Southwest R.O.T.C. Battalion:

The current year in R.O.T.C. has seen many strides forward in the preparedness of Southwest students for positions of leadership before and after graduation.

Under the guidance of the military instructor and the cadet officers, the prescribed military schedule has been thoroughly presented to the battalion, and the cadets have met the revised training program with fine cooperation.

The opportunity to take an active part in this program and to associate with my fellow officers was a privilege I will always remember. To the leaders and battalion of next year, the best of luck!

MILTON A. ABRAMS,
Lieutenant-Colonel,
Kansas City R.O.T.C. Regiment.

Supervising the Southwest R.O.T.C. Battalion is Master Sergeant William A. Story. His medals and decorations and sleeveful of stripes tell the story of his long service to Uncle Sam. He holds the highest rank possible among enlisted men. The records show his splendid service to the R.O.T.C. Battalion of Southwest High School. He has led the unit to a position of high standing in Kansas City and the Seventh Service Command. We of Southwest have good reason to be proud of William A. Story, Master Sergeant, U.S.A.

RIFLE TEAM

Again, this year as last, the R.O.T.C. Rifle Team brought honors to itself as well as to our school by winning first place in the city match. The total score was 1024 out of a possible 1200 points. Twelve men fired each of the four positions and the six high scores were counted each time. The six cadets with the highest total scores were: First Lieutenant Ackenhausen, Captain Kirkwood, Staff Sergeant Meier, PFC Hammack, PFC Preble, and Private Wyatt.

Early in December, the Rifle Team elected Captain Kirkwood as team captain, Private Wyatt as team coach, and Lieutenant Campbell as team manager.

The six team members mentioned above received medals as recognition of their ability, and the battalion was awarded a trophy. Five of the six high scorers received campaign bars for scores over 160.

SOUTHWEST BAND

Flashing orange and brown uniforms ornamented by touches of dazzling white; the oh-so-easy look of precise marching; the twinkling, twirling of white-clad majorettes; the gaiety of members during a well-earned respite; the broad smile of an amiable director, Mr. Alvin Stephens—all mark the band as one of the most popular organizations at Southwest.

But it is also one of our most hard-working organizations. In the fall, in addition to its efforts to acquaint new members with the ropes and to learn to play together under new leaders, it devotes two hours a week, often in the bitter cold, to a work-out on the field, synchronizing playing, marching, and twirling.

With the end of the basketball season, the band begins to concentrate upon a concert repertoire, developing those numbers which not only have a popular appeal, but are suitable for performance at any concert, however dignified it may be.

Every member feels that he has the personal responsibility of seeing that each performance is tip-top; not only does he put in much intensive practice perfecting his own part, but he tries to encourage every other member of the organization, too, and when one of them has a solo, you'll find the whole band plugging for him as the spectators at a ball game cheer their "hero" on to victory. Whether working under drum major, student director, or Mr. Stephens, there's still that feeling, throughout the band, of pulling together . . . "one for all, and all for one."

No matter what it's playing, or where, it's still "our" band—the band we all hail at football and basketball games as it goes marching down the field in all its glory, and of which, after one of its spectacular performances, we speak in such proud and ringing tones.

SOUTHWEST ORCHESTRA

The orchestra is not only one of the most important organizations at Southwest, but also one of the most fascinating. This year, the task of directing the orchestra fell to a new leader, Mr. George Keenan. Desiring to develop a feeling of general participation in the organization and to remove much of the routine work from his shoulders so that he might devote his time to building up the orchestra, he has increased the number of its officers to five—president, secretary, treasurer, concertmaster, and student director. Difficulties encountered in enrolling a large brass section have been smoothed out by securing the services of several band members who attend two or three rehearsals before each concert, thus making possible the well-balanced performances of the orchestra.

Every afternoon during seventh hour, strains of music issue from Room 217—for that is the headquarters of the orchestra. Occasionally, some lone player may be heard striving to perfect a difficult passage. How many the remonstrances that precede these solos! And yet, how great the satisfaction resulting from them!

Sometimes all but one or two groups of players are excused to the comparative quiet of a study hall in order that the remaining players may work more intensively on troublesome passages which have been delaying the harmonious completion of a number.

If the practice goes well during the week, Friday brings a special treat, for on that day an hour of sight-reading—trying new music, re-reading old, or playing some well-loved number—rewards the week's efforts.

Orchestra is almost unique among high school courses in that success can be achieved only by the joint efforts of all. No member is insignificant. Perhaps this explains the loyalty orchestra members feel toward their orchestra. And from their loyalty, one may gather that they wouldn't miss that final hour in 217 for love or money.

OUR HARMONY

A melody floats through the empty hall,
The chorus lends its music to the sky.
The choir in Christmas vespers does enthral,
While silver notes of Glee Club float on high.

The boys' ensemble's song like thunder rolls;
In contrast, rings the caroling quartette.
So deep in mem'ry, so engraved in souls,
Are their sweet songs, we never shall forget.

Symphonic strains of orchestra transcend
The drone of school; while beats forth from the band
A march in which the drums their spirits rend.
How sweet is music both from voice and hand!

Oh, tell me, what would life at Southwest be Without the blessing of its harmony.

REDSKIN REVELS of '44

"I Love a Parade" sang the members of the Revels cast, as the Southwest band marched through the aisles, heralding the opening of the Redskin Revels of '44. On the nights of December first and second, it was "circus time" in the auditorium of Southwest. The students, under their student director, Katie Lou Peirson, produced two lively and entertaining performances.

Following a little boy and his teddy bear through a dream, Southwest went to a spectacular circus, packed with singers, dancers, and comedians. After beginning at the ticket office, where the two old ladies of "Arsenic and Old Lace" bought their tickets, and the cross-eyed barker engaged in an argument with a crazy old woman, we attended two side-shows, the "Great Brucini," and "Madame Zadrucka."

Next a chorus of seven girls sang "Good Ship Lollipop," as Nancy Weller performed with Tippie, the singing dog. A pantomime of "Old King Cole," in which the jolly old soul killed his fiddlers three, was followed by the tragedy of the "Man on the Flying Trapeze," who was the victim of some rope-cutting vandal.

Several other featured attractions were: eight girls and Jimmie Hawes in "Gay Nineties" swimming suits singing "By the Sea"; the Great Smooch and his harem of beautiful girls with outlandish headdresses; the waltzing horse, and the quartet singing "Pony Boy." Charles Orthwein in a ringmaster's tap; Mary Ann Heuermann in a toe strut; John Pearce, Dolores Flasco, both in solo dances; and a ballet group dancing to the "Blue Danube" comprised the group of dancers who added so much to this year's Revels.

While Harriet Harlow sang "Swinging on a Star," the boy dreamer came swinging out of the sky on a big, silvery star. With the entire cast singing "When the Circus Came to Town," the curtain fell on the highly successful Revels of '44.

Overtures and background music furnished by the Southwest Orchestra, scenery and props painted by the Art Department, and choral singing by the Music Department added color and tone to the performance.

"THE IMAGINARY INVALID"

In a Parisian sitting-room, about the year 1673, sat Argan, the imaginary invalid, who was telling Angelique, his eldest daughter, that he had promised her hand to Thomas Diafoirus. Hearing this, Angelique wept bitterly, for she was in love with a dashing young Frenchman, Cleante. The vivacious little maid, Toinette, interrupted Argan and jeered at him for even considering such a foolish wedding. At this point, Beline, Argan's hypocritical and mercenary second wife, preparing to have the inheritance made over to her instead of the children, entered with a notary, M. De Bonnefog.

The next morning, while Toinette was dusting, the young lover, Cleante, entered, posing as Angelique's singing teacher. When Argan came limping in, Toinette introduced him as such. Of course, Angelique was startled to see him, but she did not disclose his identity. The door bell rang, and Toinette announced M. Diafoirus and his nephew, Thomas. The groom-to-be, a simple-minded fop, blundered through his memorized speeches of respect, impressing Argan, but only proving to Angelique and Toinette that the marriage would be impossible. As the curtain fell on the first scene, poor Argan was raging, for he had been tormented unmercifully by everyone, including Louison, his mischievous younger daughter.

That night, Berlade, Argan's brother, who was visiting him, warned him that he was only making himself sicker with all that medicine, and ordered the apothecary, M. Fleurant, to take away the prescription. Argan's physician came in, and condemned the miserable invalid to death within four days.

In an effort to prove to Argan that doctors of that time were ignorant and that he really was not sick, Toinette disguised herself as a doctor and threatened to cut off his arm and pluck out his eye. Anxious, also, for him to see the true character of his wife and daughter, she persuaded him to pretend that he were dead. When Beline rejoiced at his death and sweet Angelique mourned, Argan arose from the couch, and after chasing his wife from the house, consented to the marriage of Angelique and Cleante.

Still, Argan was disappointed, because there would be no doctor in the family, but at Toinette's and Berlade's suggestion, he decided to become one himself. Thus the curtain fell on this riotous farce, by Moliere, presented by the senior class of 1945.

STAGE CREW

Unseen and unapplauded, the stage crew works faithfully behind the scenes. The members of this organization spend many of their free hours, preparing for and cleaning up after each performance. Days before the actual performance, one might find the stage crew busy after school painting scenery, building props, and preparing all the small things that make up a good performance.

Setting up the public address system and adjusting the electrical apparatus for lighting effects are jobs exclusively reserved for the electrical crew. These boys are especially trained and have proved themselves capable and efficient.

Although the raising of the curtain and the dimming of the lights seem comparatively unimportant, no performance would be possible without the stage crew.

"Mister Chairman, worthy opponents, ladies and gentlemen, we of the affirmative are resolved that the legal voting age should be reduced to eighteen years." So spoke the first affirmative in his introduction to the debate topic for this year. Public speaking and advanced speech classes found the subject to be of special interest and were involved in many heated arguments on both the affirmative and negative sides.

A team of twelve was chosen to represent Southwest in debates with Manual, Paseo, and Westport. Seldom has such enthusiasm been shown or such strong conviction exhibited. Quick thinking, clear presentation, and strong rebuttal material gave Southwest debaters an excellent reputation. These friendly debates contributed invaluable to the establishment of amicable relations throughout the four schools.

Those participating gained much both in pure enjoyment and in beneficial speaking experience. During the ten-week debating season, a pertinent problem of the country received thorough consideration by the group with which it is likely to be most concerned. The display of genuine interest and well-rounded knowledge of the subject, added immeasurably to the worth of the discussion.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

By Frank Seabee

On a warm day in early spring, a man sat on a terrace outside a little white cottage contemplating the grandeur of the Georgian landscape dressed in April green. Three hours later the world was shocked by that man's death. Franklin Delano Roosevelt had died.

From every corner of the globe, messages of sympathy poured into the White House—from Churchill, from Stalin, from Chiang Kai-Chek, from Latin America, from De Gaulle. The messages heralded our President as a world leader, as a freedom-loving statesman, as a true patriot.

But the President was more than that. He symbolized the spirit of America. In his carefree yet dignified manner, he typified the seriousness, the pride, the laughter, and the devotion to duty of this great nation.

He was loyal—loyal to himself, to his beliefs, to his country, to his God.

He was unselfish and considerate of others. When stricken with infantile paralysis, he overcame that dread disease and helped others by establishing the foundation at Warm Springs, Georgia. Today, because of his kindness, hundreds of American cripples walk again. Thousands of others, inspired by his indomitable will, have received new hope.

He was courageous—outspoken and fearless in what he believed to be right. In his first inaugural, he declared: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." During the dark days of our nation's worst depression conditions were at a standstill, but he was a man of action. He made mistakes. Like few men, he admitted them. Like fewer men, he rose above them.

He strove for unity of all the Americas. He established Pan-American Day. He destroyed the suspicion and wariness with which Latin America regarded us, by a good neighbor policy.

Like his friend and former chief, Woodrow Wilson, he foresaw a second World War. Under his direction, Lend-Lease was passed, destroyers traded to England, the Army and Navy programs expanded. Shattering precedent, he ordered peace time conscription. When war finally was thrust upon us by a slinking, sneaking, treacherous foe, he chose his military advisors and leaders with care, mobilized industry, and prepared the country for a long war.

He fought the battle against inflation—and won! Though ridiculed and criticized, he prevented that deadly spiral which winds its destructive way up and ever up.

Winning the war on the fighting fronts, he determined that America should not lose it at the peace table. With Churchill, Stalin, and Chiang Kai-Chek, he laid the foundations of world harmony.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was human. I don't believe there was a person in this country who didn't think he knew the President intimately. He could talk with Joe and Winnie and the Generalissimo and then tell us about it. Unlike Wilson, he knew the people. He was part of them; and they part of him.

Though he did not see final victory, he lived to witness Germany and Japan rocking under the weight of Allied might. He knew that victory was as certain as the daylight illuminating a world of darkness. In that faith he died serene.

But his soul lives on—lives in the indomitable spirit of our land. His love of country has deepened our faith in the United States of America.

“ . . . sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all its hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!”
As long as we have leaders like
Franklin Delano Roosevelt, we will sail
on!

IWO JIMA—SYMBOL OF WORLD BROTHERHOOD

By Carolyn Ogden

It was only a short while ago that a picture appeared in the newspapers of America. So strikingly did it resemble an immortal statue that all who saw it marvelled. The picture was of four United States marines, struggling to raise the stars and stripes on an island in the Pacific called Iwo Jima, an island costing much of fear, much of pain, much of life. These marines, their courage, and their faith were, to those who saw, the living symbol of a common bond among men. How many Americans, rich and poor, old and young, alike, must have felt a stir of emotion deep within their hearts!

The factory worker, picking up his morning paper, gulps hard to keep from showing his feelings. He thinks about that trip of fear from France to America, of the bitter march along a dirt road outside Paris with other refugees. He is a Jew, and what man of pure Aryan blood will tolerate a Jew? But here in America—ah, nation among nations,—he has found safety and with it hope. No longer must he see the stark terror in the eyes of his children. No longer must he be sworn at or beaten. The factory worker glances about his little bungalow proudly. “All this I have done for myself. I am an American!”

ing the paper at last after her work is finished, unashamed lets the tears roll down her cheeks. She thinks of her son in the days when there was no war. How dear he was, that son of hers, how wonderfully unlike other boys! And the kindly neighbors used to smile at her and say how amazingly he resembled every American boy. “Killed in action” the report had said. “He died like this,” she thinks. “He died fighting for the things we stand for, we here at home. He did not die in vain.”

The little child, coming across the paper in her play, looks idly at the picture. She doesn't understand much of what it means yet, but even to her it is beautiful. She traces the forms of the marines and the flag with her tiny finger, wondering. She doesn't play much, just sits and looks. Her toys, little dolls and stuffed clowns lie unnoticed at her side. Her small, black puppy pokes his velvet nose into her hand, begging her to come and play. Her mother watches this unaccustomed quiet and smiles, “How I would like to know what she is thinking.”

The minister, toiling over the sermon on “the prophets” he means to deliver next Sunday, dissatisfied looks down at his paper. He scratches out what he has written, begins again. The sermon is no longer on the prophets. He goes into the church next to his study and kneels before the altar. The silence and the emptiness of the place are unbroken by his prayer. "O Lord God, these boys have within them Thy will. Grant that this great picture may spread to all the full and perfect meaning of brotherhood among men. Give Thy servant grace to tell abroad the meaning portrayed in this picture. Amen."

And so have the factory worker's hope, the mother's thankfulness, the little child's play, and the minister's prayer come to life in a picture of four marines on Iwo Jima. So has the Jew seen it and forgotten persecution, the Japanese-American seen it and found joy, the Negro seen it and felt a great rebirth. So have the Catholic and the Protestant seen it and joined hands. This is not merely a picture. It is rather the representation of the entire bitter struggle on an island which, they say, will rank with Valley Forge and Gettysburg in memory. May this symbol of a common unity and purpose among mankind penetrate to the heart of every American home. As long as generation passes into generation, as long as winter passes into spring, may it flame an immortal torch upon the pages of time!

THE FOUNDATION FOR A LASTING WORLD PEACE

By Loeb H. Granoff

"Peace on earth, good will toward men," has been man's prayer through the ages. Why that prayer has been answered by greater and deadlier wars, only Divine Providence knows. Today the world is fighting the most devastating war in history, a war that has ruined and wrecked nations, brought death to millions yet uncounted, and tears, and sorrow, and misery to millions who can never be counted.

When, in God's own good time, the mighty scourge of this war shall pass away, what then? Our world will be almost ruined. Governments will be without people, and people without government. Even the victors will be weakened. In short, the world will be faced with political, social, and economic problems staggering to the imagination. These problems must be properly solved if the world is to have permanent peace and security.

It is essential for us all to realize that perhaps never again, certainly not in the near future, will we have such an opportunity to establish a durable peace. When the day comes to write the permanent, the durable peace, on what principles should it be fashioned?

My friends, I respectfully say, that the world can build a lasting peace on but one set of principles, the American principles of freedom and of justice. Here in the United States, man has equality before the law in all things. He has a right to make a living for his dear ones, to worship God according to his own conscience. In other words, the real democratic idea is that every man and every woman has civil, and religious, and economic freedom. That is true liberty. Here in the United States we have such liberty. All peoples must have it if the world is to be made permanently safe from oppression. Under our great charter, the American Constitution, this nation has become the greatest democracy in the history of the world. No world charter will insure a lasting peace unless it has within it, the great spirit of the American Constitution.

So, let us hope and pray that after a full and complete military victory over the enemies of decency, a war-weary mankind will study the principles that have governed America for one hundred and fifty years, and adopt them as a foundation stone for a new world order. Then, my friends, when the American spirit and philosophy of life is embodied in a world charter, all people can go to their homes, and into their churches and schools, and say, as did Isaiah, three thousand years ago:

"And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore."

THE OLD YOUNG MAN

By Virginia Ogden

I saw him just the other day, walking along a dusty road, neither a very young man nor yet a very old one. He might have thumbed a ride or stopped a minute to rest beside the road, but there he was, making his weary way—somewhere. He was not a prepossessing sort of man, tall perhaps and rather thinner than the average, but not at all extraordinary. Yet in this same appearance his fascination lay, for he had the physical stature of a lithe and supple youth and the face of an old, old man. Looking at him, one might have been reminded of something else. He was like America—a tired form treading the dusty road of progress to a distant destination. This, then, is a portrait of an old young man, and it is also a portrait of America.

It was a cold day, and he clutched a worn, threadbare coat about him, as if in defiance of the chill air which sought to touch him with its icy fingers. On his lapel, almost hidden by the ragged edges of the buttonhole, an army discharge pin glittered faintly. His shoes were dusty and battered and seemed somehow to shuffle along mechanically, heedless of their owner's will. The sole of one of them had shaken loose, making each step an effort. Tossed by the ever-varying fancy of the wind, his shaggy, snow-white hair had fallen into half-shut eyes, rendering what had before been a sufficiently blind progress into an even blinder one. Who he was and whither he was bound, only he could fathom.

He had the look of a man returned from war about him, but it was rather the look of many wars than that of only one. A thin, scarecrow of a figure he must have appeared upon the battlefield, strangely ludicrous with the horror of cannon and bayonet about him. Fighting side by side with older men and older nations, he must have seemed a youthful David among many venerable Methuselahs. The hate and love which he had found lay smouldering in the hard steel of his eyes. Grotesque scenes of blood and suffering were reflected there—and stark, naked death. It was hard to believe that one so young could have seen so much of life. He had driven with Pluto into the very jaws of hell and escaped to tell the tale. The trip had made him what he was—an old young man.

As his eyes revealed that he had been a soldier of the wars, so did his face reveal that he had been and was a leader of the people. Whether minister or statesman or teacher of the masses could not be told, but on his face the history of his life had been inscribed. It was as if a thousand tiny rivers had cut their courses there, never to be erased by blood or tears. How many times both blood and tears had tried to blot them out, I doubt that even he could say. His mouth lay like a pale, thin line within this myriad of wrinkles. A long, firm mouth it was, deep set and kind. Had millionaire or pauper asked for words of comfort there, neither would have asked in vain. He might have trudged long miles in wind and sleet to calm a mother's fears and then returned in muddy shoes to talk with diplomats and statesmen. He was, in truth, a man to guide the multitudes! A man of the rich and poor alike, he seemed, and of the young and old, for he was himself an old young man.

But if he were a leader of the people, he must have been in other times a common man among them. The hands with which he clutched his ragged coat were hard square hands, made to wield an ax or drive a nail. Once, perhaps, these hands had dragged forth stones to build a monument and thus had learned to build a structure of their own, stone upon solid stone to last forever. Once, perhaps, these hands had hewn a cabin from the pine trees and put within it furniture and gay red-checked curtains. Once, perhaps, these hands had done as had the Israelites, who tore down idle images to build up stronger symbols in their hearts. These were the hands of pioneers, of workers, and of lookers to the future. These were the hands of little men, some day to head the nations of the world. Yet they belonged to a common man in a ragged coat; they belonged to an old young man.

No common heart could it have been which beat inside this common man. His dusty feet could not have been mere common feet. Perchance his heart and feet were one, his heart commanding, his feet obeying the commands. The spirit of adventure seemed ingrained within them both. To swim the Mississippi, to scale the Rocky Mountains, to fight, to build, to conquer in the West—all these had voiced a challenge. But these had been the deeds of yesterday. With the changing of the night to morning, his hair had turned from black to white. His heart was beating slowly; his feet were trudging wearily along a dusty road. Yesterday's young lover of adventure was today an old young man.

Soldier, leader, builder, challenger of fortune; fighting, teaching, working, striving; the man in every case had been the country. Yet who he was and whither he was bound, only he could fathom. The old young man was walking still when last I saw him. And as he disappeared beyond the hilltop, leaving a cloud of dust behind him, the cloud of dust became an impenetrable mist, and the road beyond the hill became the future.

THE ETERNAL DRAMA

By John Nesselhof

Near my home flows a little brook, on whose banks a grove of mighty willows, a few elms, and one or two lonely hemlocks stand. The coming and going of the seasons into this pleasant spot are quite dramatic. I shall now attempt to tell the story of one year of the dell, in its four moods.

SPRING

Spring came early this particular year. In February the buds were stirring inside themselves and by the middle of March had burst their jackets and blossomed out into delicate green leaves. There was a sweet smell in the soft spring air, the breath of infancy and motherhood. The willows had not yet turned grey and were as gay and frivolous as the elms in their saucy green dress. The resident cardinals flitted about looking for a suitable nesting spot in which to raise their children. The water in the brook ran crystal clear and the sky above was as blue as the robin's eggs which soon would be reposing in some nest under the proud and watchful eye of the parent bird.

Rabbits forsook their warm winter burrows to scamper about in the cool, light-gold sunshine and nibble at the young, tender grass. Even the lowly angle worm oozed his way out of his sticky home, exhilarated by the coming of Spring. The gentle rains cleansed and watered the earth as April promised to fulfill her pledge of flowers in May. Spring was lovely that year, a fresh, pristine rival to her coluptuous sister, Summer.

SUMMER

The tender care of the dell by Spring proved fruitful for Summer. The leaves of the willows were a rich, greenish grey, while the bright green of the elms and other trees had softened to a more respectable shade. A great heat fell that summer, however, and the stream and wildlife moved sluggishly and with little extra motion. The days were filled with the burning, steely white light of the sun and the cardinals, their carmine feathers dusty, perched panting in the verdant bower. At night the heat abated somewhat and across the moonlit dell the silent shadow of a bat could be seen flitting nervously in and out of the great willows, the nemesis of the wood's insect life.

The rabbit colony made great sport during these silver nights, and tracks were thick in the moist earth by the stream bank. Their midnight frolics were filled with cavorting and tumbling. The earthworm, affrighted at the thumping of the rabbits, left his humid hole and gulped in the warm, lazy air. But the end of Summer was fast approaching as Autumn longed to play her scene in the dell.

AUTUMN

Heavy rains ushered in Autumn, breaking the drought of Summer. The stream rose several feet, swollen, a muddy, sullen yellow. The trees grew weary, their leaves yellowed and fell. Great masses of twirling willow leaves cascaded from the heights to the silt covered ground. A week of quiet followed the rains and mellow sunshine bathed the naked branches with its warmth. Plants, grasses, and all the little forest flowers struggled to live but silently, swiftly faded and returned to the dust whence they had come.

The rabbits hopped nervously about,

the fat complacency of Summer a mere memory, while the stark lean days of coming Winter stared disturbingly at them. The lonely earthworm lay quietly within the chill earth. Life was seeping from him as it seemed to slip away from the entire wood.

Yet this had been a colorful season—the trees in their gaudy coats, standing shimmering in the sun . . . the willows, dominating all, their sturdy trunks the very epitome of strength . . . the brilliant hued cardinals as they enjoyed their last fling in a warm world. But as the cold searching fingers of the North Wind felt their way into the wood, the world knew that the bright, farcial life of Autumn was over, and the Great Puritan and Chastiser was coming.

WINTER

The stream was a frozen mass, still and white, its pleasant gurgle muted by the stupifying effect of winter. The shadows of the bare branches made fine patterns like delicate filigree on the ice. Sharp and crystalline was the air and the creak of an ice coated, snow burdened tree echoed quite plainly through the wood.

The rabbits left their warren only to find food, content to lie quietly in their holes awaiting better weather. The earthworm was long gone and his once splendid system of tunnels returned to the same shapeless mud as had their builder. Sitting stiffly on a denuded branch, the cardinals were a strangely incongruous pair, their brilliant red contrasting sharply with the grey and white background.

A severe storm swept out of a black

February night, a storm of wild and furious rain, tumbling thunderbolts, and a roaring gale. The willows were at the mercy of the wind, swaying and groaning like great ships on the high seas. The mightiest of the willows, the king of the grove, weakened and fell crashing to the earth, smashing lesser trees in its fall. The other trees moaned and bewailed the loss of their leader as the wind whistled through their boughs.

The dell was a sorrowful wreck after the passing of the storm. The Great Willow was gone, a fallen giant; huge limbs had been torn off many trees. A flood caused by the torrent of rain again deposited a layer of silt and debris. The all-concealing snow was gone and the stark ruins were revealed. Winter had played her scene—violently, dramatically, but had nearly wrecked the stage in doing so.

SPRING, AGAIN

But the days went on, and the drear picture began to soften. Tiny new saplings grew already at the base of the Great Willow, and soft green leaves began to form. The earthworm's progeny began an orgy of building, and the cardinal chirped contentedly to his mate. The baby rabbits played in the pale sunshine and even the oldest rabbit bestirred himself to go out to see the glorious re-awakening. Then a new forest friend came into the dell—a small green frog who made the bank of the stream his home. And one day while croaking wistfully at eventide he was answered by the inviting call of another frog. LIFE was complete!

LIFE IS ETERNAL!

IN A GARDEN

By Lois Longfellow

In a garden all of life is found.
A living germ lies dormant in the seed
Until its fertile strength breaks through the ground;
A tender sprout is born; new life is freed.
The infant green unfolds beneath the warm
And gentle fingers of an April sun,
And lifts through days of blight and weed and storm,
Till in some golden hour, its purpose won,
The stirring buds unveil and slowly spread
Each glorious bloom. Then, as the summer dies,
The petals fall and amber leaves are shed;
The withering stalk bends low and, yielding, lies
Upon its quiet bed and, covered deep
Beneath a soft, white blanket, falls asleep.

TWO BITS

By Larry Kauffman

The C. O. was looking Charlie and me straight in the face. His deep voice was sullen and his features drawn from lack of sleep.

"You know this mission is urgent and dangerous," he said. "I chose you two out of the volunteers because you know more about strafing than the others and because it was a plane from their base that gunned your brother in his parachute." He paused and I again visualized the Jap Zero with the scowling yellow dragon sprawled across the fuselage as its flaming guns brought death to Dick swinging helplessly in his chute.

The C. O. continued, "Because of the position of the field, you will have to attack single file. That means the Japs will have time to train their guns on the second man." Then he added in a low voice, "You will decide who goes last between yourselves. You will plot your own course and you will be able to get all data needed in the chart shack. Your Mustangs are gassed and ready to go. There will be perfect visibility up to 3,000 feet where you will encounter mists. Your main purpose on this raid is to cripple as many aircraft as possible and mop up anti-aircraft defenses. Tomorrow I'm going to send over fifty Mustangs and completely wipe out the field." Drawing a troubled breath, he looked at the ceiling with unseeing eyes and half whispered, "Those Nips have shot down one too many unarmed hospital planes."

Back at the barracks Charlie said, "We forgot to salute."

"Funny how you forget stuff like that out here, isn't it," I said.

Scuffing his shoe on the floor and turning the ring on his finger around in a nervous manner, Charlie ignored my question.

"We'll have the element of surprise anyway, kid," he said.

"Yeah."

The silence was depressing and seemed to crush us in from all sides as we groped for the right words. Finally Charlie blurted out.

"I'm takin' the rear, see."

"Oh, tell me more, Dr. Watson."

"Now look, little brother, it would be a pity to ruin these nice floors with your thick skull."

For the words "little brother" I took vengeance and Charlie made contact with the floor with my bedroll planted firmly in his stomach.

That's the way Charlie and I chased gloom; Dick, too, before he got his. In fact, Charlie claimed that every now and then he saw Dick's spirit flying with us, but I had my doubts.

"Okay, sport," Charlie said, "we'll flip for it. Heads I win, tails you win."

As usual he won. It seemed that he always won. With a silly grin on his face he dropped the quarter on his bunk and we went over to the chart shack to plot our course.

Forty-five minutes later we were skimming over the tree tops and practically picking coconuts with our props, Charlie gloating in the rear.

Sweeping in over the Jap base an hour and twenty-two minutes later, we found the little Sons of Nippon wide awake. In fact, three were just taking off. I leaned forward suddenly as the lead plane came into clear view. On the side was a scowling yellow dragon glaring at me like a neon sign. Almost automatically I skidded to the right to place him squarely in my sights. Biting my tongue, I pressed the button and felt a surge of joy as my cannon shells started splattering into the dragons head and mangling the delicate motor directly behind it. After one three-second burst, the little ship shook itself as a dog shakes water. In a puff of dirty gray smoke and an explosion I could hear above the roar of my own power plant; the dragon was spread over the field in small jagged pieces. "For Dick," I yelled, and banked steeply to the left to concentrate on the hangars which were concealed with coconut leaves.

I was still a good distance away from the hangars and had a chance for a fleeting glance to see what Charlie was doing. I was just in time to witness the only two power driven planes in the world leave the ground without aid of a motor, Charlie's jettisoned belly tank being the propelling agent. Inspired, I skipped the first hangar and released my tank over the second. It crashed through the weak roof and exploded amidst the planes inside. Streamers of flame rose to the roof and were blown toward the hangars on either side by concussion. Soon all three were flaming coffins for the planes trapped within. I used my cannon on the remaining five and my tracers did their work.

I was at the end of the landing strip now with my part of the mission completed. Pulling up to avoid a hill, I looked back and saw what the C. O. had been fearing. Charlie, finishing his run on the anti-aircraft machine guns, was trapped in a deadly crossfire by the last three. His ship faltered, then slid off on one wing.

"Luck," he yelled into the radio, "and I'll be seein' ya." The plane's nose snapped down, roared into the ground, flipped over on its back, and then after a few seconds the wing tanks completely destroyed the dying ship.

I hauled back on the stick, poured on the power and unmindingly watched the altimeter wind up.

What did Charlie mean, "I'll be seein' ya"? My thoughts came back to flying when I noticed that I was 5,000 feet high and smothered in by fog.

Looking around, I saw some angry scars from "Made in Japan" bullets, which prompted me to peer through the dimness for any pursuing little slant eyes.

My mind kept wandering back to Charlie. I held my hand up and looked at it. No shakes, no whiteness, I was just dazed I guess. Charlie's death struck at my heart and even now seemed to be slashing it with a knife. Dick's death hadn't affected me this way, but then Dick was five years ahead of me in school and we had never chummed together. Charlie was different. We had done everything together. I knew most of his thoughts, his dreams and longings. I knew him in all states of mind. Now both brothers were gone, leaving me alone. I did not feel completely separated from them, however, for I imagined that when I was up here they were still with me. I now knew what Charlie meant by saying, "I'll be seein' ya." Maybe you wouldn't understand; you have to be a flier and be up in the vast prairie of blue sky and white clouds with the knowledge that somehow God is nearer to you in order to understand that no matter how dead a flier is, his spirit is always above. You have to realize that whether you can see them or not, they are always flying along with others like them, chasing the birds and laughing at the slow cumbersome clouds as they gracefully skim through their billowing softness.

I was nearing my field now, and before easing down through the mists I looked back. A faint glimmer of sunlight that managed to find its way through the soup flashed on their ghostly wings as they turned to leave. Neither Dick or Charlie could come down to the ground. I knew I would be lonely down there, but they would always be patiently waiting for me when my eager craft would again claw its way up to its natural home. Looking forward, I lowered my wheels and flaps, got clearance, and set down.

In the barracks again, I began laying out some of Charlie's small things to send home and I came across that fateful quarter. My throat felt dry and tight as I stood there unconsciously turning the two-bit piece over in my hand. Suddenly I realized what a swell, unselfish, loving brother Charlie had been on his last day on this earth. The quarter had two heads.

HIS ROOM

By Marian Fried

A little room,
But oh, so light,
With colored toys
And pictures bright.

The self-same room
For an older boy;
With pennants and relics
Of high school joy.

A quiet room,
Its work all done;
With a star in the window,
For he is gone.

TO A ROSE

By Joanne Jeans

When sunlight streams into the garden space,
And beckons forth the rose's tiny head
Of yellow velvet, purest white, or red,
'Tis nature's own that lifts its dainty face,
And opens wide its petals to embrace
The soft, June breeze, which stirs the leaves o'erhead.
Such fragrant perfume scents its summer's bed,
And draws the passer-by unto that place.
Oh, lovely rose! you are as fair as youth.
Your tender bud is like the blushing maid.
While she grows into womanhood, in truth,
You blossom into velvet folds; then, fade
Away. And woman, too, soon finds her hour
Of life has fled, as in the roses' bower.

IF ANDY WERE HERE

By Esther Goodman

It is the sort of thing that could happen only in wartime, I suppose, when plans are made for hours or an evening and not months or a year, since the future is as flighty as the winds; and distance becomes a competitor.

Even now, when I think of Mr. Gustafson back there in North Dakota, and remember how proudly he walked into the big red barn each morning with me saying, "Well, son, it looks like a good day for us"—when I visualize again the comfortable living room, I find myself trying to believe that it couldn't be true—foolishly, because I know it is; trying to believe because I wish it were not true, and because, in a way, for a while in this war, Mr. Gustafson was my father.

Actually, of course, he isn't my father; not even a relative. We were together only a short time, and I'll probably never even see him again.

Last summer, when the farmers' crops in the state were threatened because of help shortages, soldiers on furloughs provided relief. Some of us, who had had experience at running tractors, went directly into farmers' homes and lived there until the work was done.

"You go to a big place run by a guy named Gustafson," my sergeant told me. "He'll come in for you this morning, so have your stuff packed."

I liked Mr. Gustafson right away. As we drove along the dusty road, he turned to me and said, "I didn't mean to hurry you, but the wife has a big dinner all ready and we thought you might as well get in on it."

"You didn't hurry me at all. And I'll be glad to get at some home-cooked food. I guess no matter how good Army food is, you get a little tired of it."

"I'll say you do."

"Well, the wife's made some cherry pie. Do you like cherry pie?"

"That's my favorite."

"That was always Andy's favorite when he was home. He's my boy. He's in the service, too. He's a flyer."

"Where is he now, Mr. Gustafson?"

"Over in the Pacific somewhere. He's been out there just about ever since it started. Enlisted right after he got out of high school."

"I'll bet you miss him a lot."

"Yes, it doesn't seem the same at all with Andy not around." Mr. Gustafson stared out at the road in thought. "Andy and me were always pretty much together. You know Jim—I'll just call you that—you'll be doing about the same things Andy did this time two summers ago out here on the farm, and I'm apt to be bossing you a bit once in a while, and if I happen to say, 'Well, my boy,' don't think anything about it. That's the way I always talked to Andy."

Andy's picture was on the old upright piano, and it was the first thing Mrs. Gustafson showed me after I had finished the cherry pie. When I moved in with the Gustafsons, in a way it was just as though Andy was still there. At breakfast-time, Mrs. Gustafson would always serve me Andy's favorite breakfast explaining, "That's what Andy always liked. I hope it's all right." And it was the same at dinner and supper. There was always something that was one of Andy's favorites.

And walking out to the barn each morning to milk the cows and feed the horses, sometimes I almost felt as though I were Andy, because Mr. Gustafson talked to me as though I were his own son. He told me a lot about the farm and his financial matters and how he met Mrs. Gustafson and married her.

Often he commented that I did things around the barn the same way that Andy always had. "You're a good boy on the farm," he said once.

And one night Mrs. Gustafson made me feel very good. She came upstairs after I had gone to read, and she knocked on the door.

"I just wanted to see you for a minute," she said.

"Come right in, Mrs. Gustafson."

She walked in timidly. She was a little woman and she didn't look as though she had much strength, but she was always busy at something. She handed me a sweater.

"Here's something for you," she said.

"It will maybe help to keep you warm when winter comes."

"Gee, thanks, Mrs. Gustafson. I didn't expect—"

"Don't even mention it. I didn't come up here just to give you the sweater. I also wanted to tell you how wonderful it's been for us to have you here with us. You'll be leaving in a few days now, and I wanted to thank you. You've made us very happy. I've never seen Mr. Gustafson smile so much or laugh so much or be gay at the dinner-table like he's been these last few weeks. You see, he and Andy were always together, and after Andy left, he seemed to change. You can understand that. But, with you around, he's been like his old self. And so I guess we'll never really be able to tell you how grateful we are."

"Boy, I'm the one who should be grateful. This has been just like home for me. After living in barracks and everything, it's been sort of paradise."

"I'm glad that we could have you. Good night, Jim, and God bless you."

"Good night, Mrs. Gustafson, and don't you worry—Andy will be back before long and everything will be just like it was before." I didn't mean that to be brave or boastful or anything like that. I just wanted to say it very much, because I felt that way.

"That's right, Jim." And with tears in her eyes she said, "And I'll pray for you, too."

We didn't stay in this country long after our work was done on the farms. We headed out to the Pacific, and out there where I happened to go, there was a plane that had become almost a legend. I guess there are lots of them and there will be many more of them before the war is over, but this was a special one.

I met its radio operator in an Australian town one night.

"Well, pal," said this radio operator, a thin boy from Brooklyn, "our plane was piloted by the best guy I ever met. He brought the old ship and us guys in one night from a raid when it wasn't anything except a wreck that wouldn't have been worth two cents on the ground, let alone in the air. A kid from a farm in North Dakota. His name was Andy Gustafson."

"Say, there's a fellow I want to meet. I—"

"Well, that would be a little difficult to arrange at this point. He died about two minutes after he landed us."

"When did all his happen?"

"A long time ago, pal. When the war was very young."

"Before last summer?"

"Why back in February, 1943. And there was a real guy for you. Always talking about his old man and the cherry pie his mother made. They lived on a farm in North Dakota and I guess it wasn't much except a lot of land, but when he talked about it, it sounded pretty close to heaven. And that cherry pie—"

"It's the best I ever tasted in my life," I said, and I choked up and couldn't say a word more.

"Mister Chairman, worthy opponents, ladies and gentlemen, we of the affirmative are resolved that the legal voting age should be reduced to eighteen years." So spoke the first affirmative in his introduction to the debate topic for this year. Public speaking and advanced speech classes found the subject to be of special interest and were involved in many heated arguments on both the affirmative and negative sides.

A team of twelve was chosen to represent Southwest in debates with Manual, Paseo, and Westport. Seldom has such enthusiasm been shown or such strong conviction exhibited. Quick thinking, clear presentation, and strong rebuttal material gave Southwest debaters an excellent reputation. These friendly debates contributed invaluable to the establishment of amicable relations throughout the four schools.

Those participating gained much both in pure enjoyment and in beneficial speaking experience. During the ten-week debating season, a pertinent problem of the country received thorough consideration by the group with which it is likely to be most concerned. The display of genuine interest and well-rounded knowledge of the subject, added immeasurably to the worth of the discussion.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

By Frank Sebree

On a warm day in early spring, a man sat on a terrace outside a little white cottage contemplating the grandeur of the Georgian landscape dressed in April green. Three hours later the world was shocked by that man's death. Franklin Delano Roosevelt had died.

From every corner of the globe, messages of sympathy poured into the White House—from Churchill, from Stalin, from Chiang Kai-Chek, from Latin America, from De Gaulle. The messages heralded our President as a world leader, as a freedom-loving statesman, as a true patriot.

But the President was more than that. He symbolized the spirit of America. In his carefree yet dignified manner, he typified the seriousness, the pride, the laughter, and the devotion to duty of this great nation.

He was loyal—loyal to himself, to his beliefs, to his country, to his God.

He was unselfish and considerate of others. When stricken with infantile paralysis, he overcame that dread disease and helped others by establishing the foundation at Warm Springs, Georgia. Today, because of his kindness, hundreds of American cripples walk again. Thousands of others, inspired by his indomitable will, have received new hope.

He was courageous—outspoken and fearless in what he believed to be right. In his first inaugural, he declared: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." During the dark days of our nation's worst depression conditions were at a standstill, but he was a man of action. He made mistakes. Like few men, he admitted them. Like fewer men, he rose above them.

He strove for unity of all the Americas. He established Pan-American Day. He destroyed the suspicion and wariness with which Latin America regarded us, by a good neighbor policy.

Like his friend and former chief, Woodrow Wilson, he foresaw a second World War. Under his direction, Lend-Lease was passed, destroyers traded to England, the Army and Navy programs expanded. Shattering precedent, he ordered peace time conscription. When war finally was thrust upon us by a slinking, sneaking, treacherous foe, he chose his military advisors and leaders with care, mobilized industry, and prepared the country for a long war.

He fought the battle against inflation—and won! Though ridiculed and criticized, he prevented that deadly spiral which winds its destructive way up and ever up.

Winning the war on the fighting fronts, he determined that America should not lose it at the peace table. With Churchill, Stalin, and Chiang Kai-Chek, he laid the foundations of world harmony.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was human. I don't believe there was a person in this country who didn't think he knew the President intimately. He could talk with Joe and Winnie and the Generalissimo and then tell us about it. Unlike Wilson, he knew the people. He was part of them; and they part of him.

Though he did not see final victory, he lived to witness Germany and Japan rocking under the weight of Allied might. He knew that victory was as certain as the daylight illuminating a world of darkness. In that faith he died serene.

But his soul lives on—lives in the indomitable spirit of our land. His love of country has deepened our faith in the United States of America.

“ . . . sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all its hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!”
As long as we have leaders like
Franklin Delano Roosevelt, we will sail
on!

IWO JIMA—SYMBOL OF WORLD BROTHERHOOD

By Carolyn Ogden

It was only a short while ago that a picture appeared in the newspapers of America. So strikingly did it resemble an immortal statue that all who saw it marvelled. The picture was of four United States marines, struggling to raise the stars and stripes on an island in the Pacific called Iwo Jima, an island costing much of fear, much of pain, much of life. These marines, their courage, and their faith were, to those who saw, the living symbol of a common bond among men. How many Americans, rich and poor, old and young, alike, must have felt a stir of emotion deep within their hearts!

The factory worker, picking up his morning paper, gulps hard to keep from showing his feelings. He thinks about that trip of fear from France to America, of the bitter march along a dirt road outside Paris with other refugees. He is a Jew, and what man of pure Aryan blood will tolerate a Jew? But here in America—ah, nation among nations,—he has found safety and with it hope. No longer must he see the stark terror in the eyes of his children. No longer must he be sworn at or beaten. The factory worker glances about his little bungalow proudly. “All this I have done for myself. I am an American!”

ing the paper at last after her work is finished, unashamed lets the tears roll down her cheeks. She thinks of her son in the days when there was no war. How dear he was, that son of hers, how wonderfully unlike other boys! And the kindly neighbors used to smile at her and say how amazingly he resembled every American boy. “Killed in action” the report had said. “He died like this,” she thinks. “He died fighting for the things we stand for, we here at home. He did not die in vain.”

The little child, coming across the paper in her play, looks idly at the picture. She doesn't understand much of what it means yet, but even to her it is beautiful. She traces the forms of the marines and the flag with her tiny finger, wondering. She doesn't play much, just sits and looks. Her toys, little dolls and stuffed clowns lie unnoticed at her side. Her small, black puppy pokes his velvet nose into her hand, begging her to come and play. Her mother watches this unaccustomed quiet and smiles, “How I would like to know what she is thinking.”

The minister, toiling over the sermon on “the prophets” he means to deliver next Sunday, dissatisfied looks down at his paper. He scratches out what he has written, begins again. The sermon is no longer on the prophets. He goes into the church next to his study and kneels before the altar. The silence and the emptiness of the place are unbroken by his prayer. "O Lord God, these boys have within them Thy will. Grant that this great picture may spread to all the full and perfect meaning of brotherhood among men. Give Thy servant grace to tell abroad the meaning portrayed in this picture. Amen."

And so have the factory worker's hope, the mother's thankfulness, the little child's play, and the minister's prayer come to life in a picture of four marines on Iwo Jima. So has the Jew seen it and forgotten persecution, the Japanese-American seen it and found joy, the Negro seen it and felt a great rebirth. So have the Catholic and the Protestant seen it and joined hands. This is not merely a picture. It is rather the representation of the entire bitter struggle on an island which, they say, will rank with Valley Forge and Gettysburg in memory. May this symbol of a common unity and purpose among mankind penetrate to the heart of every American home. As long as generation passes into generation, as long as winter passes into spring, may it flame an immortal torch upon the pages of time!

THE FOUNDATION FOR A LASTING WORLD PEACE

By Loeb H. Granoff

"Peace on earth, good will toward men," has been man's prayer through the ages. Why that prayer has been answered by greater and deadlier wars, only Divine Providence knows. Today the world is fighting the most devastating war in history, a war that has ruined and wrecked nations, brought death to millions yet uncounted, and tears, and sorrow, and misery to millions who can never be counted.

When, in God's own good time, the mighty scourge of this war shall pass away, what then? Our world will be almost ruined. Governments will be without people, and people without government. Even the victors will be weakened. In short, the world will be faced with political, social, and economic problems staggering to the imagination. These problems must be properly solved if the world is to have permanent peace and security.

It is essential for us all to realize that perhaps never again, certainly not in the near future, will we have such an opportunity to establish a durable peace. When the day comes to write the permanent, the durable peace, on what principles should it be fashioned?

My friends, I respectfully say, that the world can build a lasting peace on but one set of principles, the American principles of freedom and of justice. Here in the United States, man has equality before the law in all things. He has a right to make a living for his dear ones, to worship God according to his own conscience. In other words, the real democratic idea is that every man and every woman has civil, and religious, and economic freedom. That is true liberty. Here in the United States we have such liberty. All peoples must have it if the world is to be made permanently safe from oppression. Under our great charter, the American Constitution, this nation has become the greatest democracy in the history of the world. No world charter will insure a lasting peace unless it has within it, the great spirit of the American Constitution.

So, let us hope and pray that after a full and complete military victory over the enemies of decency, a war-weary mankind will study the principles that have governed America for one hundred and fifty years, and adopt them as a foundation stone for a new world order. Then, my friends, when the American

spirit and philosophy of life is embodied in a world charter, all people can go to their homes, and into their churches and schools, and say, as did Isaiah, three thousand years ago:

"And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore."

THE OLD YOUNG MAN

By Virginia Ogden

I saw him just the other day, walking along a dusty road, neither a very young man nor yet a very old one. He might have thumbed a ride or stopped a minute to rest beside the road, but there he was, making his weary way—somewhere. He was not a prepossessing sort of man, tall perhaps and rather thinner than the average, but not at all extraordinary. Yet in this same appearance his fascination lay, for he had the physical stature of a lithe and supple youth and the face of an old, old man. Looking at him, one might have been reminded of something else. He was like America—a tired form treading the dusty road of progress to a distant destination. This, then, is a portrait of an old young man, and it is also a portrait of America.

It was a cold day, and he clutched a worn, threadbare coat about him, as if in defiance of the chill air which sought to touch him with its icy fingers. On his lapel, almost hidden by the ragged edges of the buttonhole, an army discharge pin glittered faintly. His shoes were dusty and battered and seemed somehow to shuffle along mechanically, heedless of their owner's will. The sole of one of them had shaken loose, making each step an effort. Tossed by the ever-varying fancy of the wind, his shaggy, snow-white hair had fallen into half-shut eyes, rendering what had before been a sufficiently blind progress into an even blinder one. Who he was and whither he was bound, only he could fathom.

He had the look of a man returned from war about him, but it was rather the look of many wars than that of only one. A thin, scarecrow of a figure he must have appeared upon the battlefield, strangely ludicrous with the horror of cannon and bayonet about him. Fighting side by side with older men and older nations, he must have seemed a youthful David among many venerable Methuselahs. The hate and love which he had found lay smouldering in the hard steel of his eyes. Grotesque scenes of blood and suffering were reflected there—and stark, naked death. It was hard to believe that one so young could have seen so much of life. He had driven with Pluto into the very jaws of hell and escaped to tell the tale. The trip had made him what he was—an old young man.

As his eyes revealed that he had been a soldier of the wars, so did his face reveal that he had been and was a leader of the people. Whether minister or statesman or teacher of the masses could not be told, but on his face the history of his life had been inscribed. It was as if a thousand tiny rivers had cut their courses there, never to be erased by blood or tears. How many times both blood and tears had tried to blot them out, I doubt that even he could say. His mouth lay like a pale, thin line within this myriad of wrinkles. A long, firm mouth it was, deep set and kind. Had millionaire or pauper asked for words of comfort there, neither would have asked in vain. He might have trudged long miles in wind and sleet to calm a mother's fears and then returned in muddy shoes to talk with diplomats and statesmen. He was, in truth, a man to guide the multitudes! A man of the rich and poor alike, he seemed, and of the young and old, for he was himself an old young man.

But if he were a leader of the people, he must have been in other times a common man among them. The hands with which he clutched his ragged coat were hard square hands, made to wield an ax or drive a nail. Once, perhaps, these hands had dragged forth stones to build a monument and thus had learned to build a structure of their own, stone upon solid stone to last forever. Once, perhaps, these hands had hewn a cabin from the pine trees and put within it furniture and gay red-checked curtains. Once, perhaps, these hands had done as had the Israelites, who tore down idle images to build up stronger symbols in their hearts. These were the hands of pioneers, of workers, and of lookers to the future. These were the hands of little men, some day to head the nations of the world. Yet they belonged to a common man in a ragged coat; they belonged to an old young man.

No common heart could it have been which beat inside this common man. His dusty feet could not have been mere common feet. Perchance his heart and feet were one, his heart commanding, his feet obeying the commands. The spirit of adventure seemed ingrained within them both. To swim the Mississippi, to scale the Rocky Mountains, to fight, to build, to conquer in the West—all these had voiced a challenge. But these had been the deeds of yesterday. With the changing of the night to morning, his hair had turned from black to white. His heart was beating slowly; his feet were trudging wearily along a dusty road. Yesterday's young lover of adventure was today an old young man.

Soldier, leader, builder, challenger of fortune; fighting, teaching, working, striving; the man in every case had been the country. Yet who he was and whither he was bound, only he could fathom. The old young man was walking still when last I saw him. And as he disappeared beyond the hilltop, leaving a cloud of dust behind him, the cloud of dust became an impenetrable mist, and the road beyond the hill became the future.

THE ETERNAL DRAMA

By John Nesselhof

Near my home flows a little brook, on whose banks a grove of mighty willows, a few elms, and one or two lonely hemlocks stand. The coming and going of the seasons into this pleasant spot are quite dramatic. I shall now attempt to tell the story of one year of the dell, in its four moods.

SPRING

Spring came early this particular year. In February the buds were stirring inside themselves and by the middle of March had burst their jackets and blossomed out into delicate green leaves. There was a sweet smell in the soft spring air, the breath of infancy and motherhood. The willows had not yet turned grey and were as gay and frivolous as the elms in their saucy green dress. The resident cardinals flitted about looking for a suitable nesting spot in which to raise their children. The water in the brook ran crystal clear and the sky above was as blue as the robin's eggs which soon would be reposing in some nest under the proud and watchful eye of the parent bird.

Rabbits forsook their warm winter burrows to scamper about in the cool, light-gold sunshine and nibble at the young, tender grass. Even the lowly angle worm oozed his way out of his sticky home, exhilarated by the coming of Spring. The gentle rains cleansed and watered the earth as April promised to fulfill her pledge of flowers in May. Spring was lovely that year, a fresh, pristine rival to her coluptuous sister, Summer.

SUMMER

The tender care of the dell by Spring proved fruitful for Summer. The leaves of the willows were a rich, greenish grey,

while the bright green of the elms and other trees had softened to a more respectable shade. A great heat fell that summer, however, and the stream and wildlife moved sluggishly and with little extra motion. The days were filled with the burning, steely white light of the sun and the cardinals, their carmine feathers dusty, perched panting in the verdant bower. At night the heat abated somewhat and across the moonlit dell the silent shadow of a bat could be seen flitting nervously in and out of the great willows, the nemesis of the wood's insect life.

The rabbit colony made great sport during these silver nights, and tracks were thick in the moist earth by the stream bank. Their midnight frolics were filled with cavorting and tumbling. The earthworm, affrighted at the thumping of the rabbits, left his humid hole and gulped in the warm, lazy air. But the end of Summer was fast approaching as Autumn longed to play her scene in the dell.

AUTUMN

Heavy rains ushered in Autumn, breaking the drought of Summer. The stream rose several feet, swollen, a muddy, sullen yellow. The trees grew weary, their leaves yellowed and fell. Great masses of twirling willow leaves cascaded from the heights to the silt covered ground. A week of quiet followed the rains and mellow sunshine bathed the naked branches with its warmth. Plants, grasses, and all the little forest flowers struggled to live but silently, swiftly faded and returned to the dust whence they had come.

The rabbits hopped nervously about,

the fat complacency of Summer a mere memory, while the stark lean days of coming Winter stared disturbingly at them. The lonely earthworm lay quietly within the chill earth. Life was seeping from him as it seemed to slip away from the entire wood.

Yet this had been a colorful season—the trees in their gaudy coats, standing shimmering in the sun . . . the willows, dominating all, their sturdy trunks the very epitome of strength . . . the brilliant hued cardinals as they enjoyed their last fling in a warm world. But as the cold searching fingers of the North Wind felt their way into the wood, the world knew that the bright, farcial life of Autumn was over, and the Great Puritan and Chastiser was coming.

WINTER

The stream was a frozen mass, still and white, its pleasant gurgle muted by the stupifying effect of winter. The shadows of the bare branches made fine patterns like delicate filigree on the ice. Sharp and crystalline was the air and the creak of an ice coated, snow burdened tree echoed quite plainly through the wood.

The rabbits left their warren only to find food, content to lie quietly in their holes awaiting better weather. The earthworm was long gone and his once splendid system of tunnels returned to the same shapeless mud as had their builder. Sitting stiffly on a denuded branch, the cardinals were a strangely incongruous pair, their brilliant red contrasting sharply with the grey and white background.

A severe storm swept out of a black

February night, a storm of wild and furious rain, tumbling thunderbolts, and a roaring gale. The willows were at the mercy of the wind, swaying and groaning like great ships on the high seas. The mightiest of the willows, the king of the grove, weakened and fell crashing to the earth, smashing lesser trees in its fall. The other trees moaned and bewailed the loss of their leader as the wind whistled through their boughs.

The dell was a sorrowful wreck after the passing of the storm. The Great Willow was gone, a fallen giant; huge limbs had been torn off many trees. A flood caused by the torrent of rain again deposited a layer of silt and debris. The all-concealing snow was gone and the stark ruins were revealed. Winter had played her scene—violently, dramatically, but had nearly wrecked the stage in doing so.

SPRING, AGAIN

But the days went on, and the drear picture began to soften. Tiny new saplings grew already at the base of the Great Willow, and soft green leaves began to form. The earthworm's progeny began an orgy of building, and the cardinal chirped contentedly to his mate. The baby rabbits played in the pale sunshine and even the oldest rabbit bestirred himself to go out to see the glorious re-awakening. Then a new forest friend came into the dell—a small green frog who made the bank of the stream his home. And one day while croaking wistfully at eventide he was answered by the inviting call of another frog. LIFE was complete!

LIFE IS ETERNAL!

IN A GARDEN

By Lois Longfellow

In a garden all of life is found.
A living germ lies dormant in the seed
Until its fertile strength breaks through the ground;
A tender sprout is born; new life is freed.
The infant green unfolds beneath the warm
And gentle fingers of an April sun,
And lifts through days of blight and weed and storm,
Till in some golden hour, its purpose won,
The stirring buds unveil and slowly spread
Each glorious bloom. Then, as the summer dies,
The petals fall and amber leaves are shed;
The withering stalk bends low and, yielding, lies
Upon its quiet bed and, covered deep
Beneath a soft, white blanket, falls asleep.

TWO BITS

By Larry Kauffman

The C. O. was looking Charlie and me straight in the face. His deep voice was sullen and his features drawn from lack of sleep.

"You know this mission is urgent and dangerous," he said. "I chose you two out of the volunteers because you know more about strafing than the others and because it was a plane from their base that gunned your brother in his parachute." He paused and I again visualized the Jap Zero with the scowling yellow dragon sprawled across the fuselage as its flaming guns brought death to Dick swinging helplessly in his chute.

The C. O. continued, "Because of the position of the field, you will have to attack single file. That means the Japs will have time to train their guns on the second man." Then he added in a low voice, "You will decide who goes last between yourselves. You will plot your own course and you will be able to get all data needed in the chart shack. Your Mustangs are gassed and ready to go. There will be perfect visibility up to 3,000 feet where you will encounter mists. Your main purpose on this raid is to cripple as many aircraft as possible and mop up anti-aircraft defenses. Tomorrow I'm going to send over fifty Mustangs and completely wipe out the field." Drawing a troubled breath, he looked at the ceiling with unseeing eyes and half whispered, "Those Nips have shot down one too many unarmed hospital planes."

Back at the barracks Charlie said, "We forgot to salute."

"Funny how you forget stuff like that out here, isn't it," I said.

Scuffing his shoe on the floor and

turning the ring on his finger around in a nervous manner, Charlie ignored my question.

"We'll have the element of surprise anyway, kid," he said.

"Yeah."

The silence was depressing and seemed to crush us in from all sides as we groped for the right words. Finally Charlie blurted out.

"I'm takin' the rear, see."

"Oh, tell me more, Dr. Watson."

"Now look, little brother, it would be a pity to ruin these nice floors with your thick skull."

For the words "little brother" I took vengeance and Charlie made contact with the floor with my bedroll planted firmly in his stomach.

That's the way Charlie and I chased gloom; Dick, too, before he got his. In fact, Charlie claimed that every now and then he saw Dick's spirit flying with us, but I had my doubts.

"Okay, sport," Charlie said, "we'll flip for it. Heads I win, tails you win."

As usual he won. It seemed that he always won. With a silly grin on his face he dropped the quarter on his bunk and we went over to the chart shack to plot our course.

Forty-five minutes later we were skimming over the tree tops and practically picking coconuts with our props, Charlie gloating in the rear.

Sweeping in over the Jap base an hour and twenty-two minutes later, we found the little Sons of Nippon wide awake. In fact, three were just taking off. I leaned forward suddenly as the lead plane came into clear view. On the side was a scowling yellow dragon glaring at me like a neon sign. Almost automatically I skidded to the right to place him squarely in my sights. Biting my tongue, I pressed the button and felt a surge of joy as my cannon shells started splattering into the dragons head and mangling the delicate motor directly behind it. After one three-second burst, the little ship shook itself as a dog shakes water. In a puff of dirty gray smoke and an explosion I could hear above the roar of my own power plant; the dragon was spread over the field in small jagged pieces. "For Dick," I yelled, and banked steeply to the left to concentrate on the hangars which were concealed with coconut leaves.

I was still a good distance away from the hangars and had a chance for a fleeting glance to see what Charlie was doing. I was just in time to witness the only two power driven planes in the world leave the ground without aid of a motor, Charlie's jettisoned belly tank being the propelling agent. Inspired, I skipped the first hangar and released my tank over the second. It crashed through the weak roof and exploded amidst the planes inside. Streamers of flame rose to the roof and were blown toward the hangars on either side by concussion. Soon all three were flaming coffins for the planes trapped within. I used my cannon on the remaining five and my tracers did their work.

I was at the end of the landing strip now with my part of the mission completed. Pulling up to avoid a hill, I looked back and saw what the C. O. had been fearing. Charlie, finishing his run on the anti-aircraft machine guns, was trapped in a deadly crossfire by the last three. His ship faltered, then slid off on one wing.

"Luck," he yelled into the radio, "and I'll be seein' ya." The plane's nose snapped down, roared into the ground, flipped over on its back, and then after a few seconds the wing tanks completely destroyed the dying ship.

I hauled back on the stick, poured on the power and unmindingly watched the altimeter wind up.

What did Charlie mean, "I'll be seein' ya"? My thoughts came back to flying when I noticed that I was 5,000 feet high and smothered in by fog.

Looking around, I saw some angry scars from "Made in Japan" bullets, which prompted me to peer through the dimness for any pursuing little slant eyes.

My mind kept wandering back to Charlie. I held my hand up and looked at it. No shakes, no whiteness, I was just dazed I guess. Charlie's death struck at my heart and even now seemed to be slashing it with a knife. Dick's death hadn't affected me this way, but then Dick was five years ahead of me in school and we had never chummed together. Charlie was different. We had done everything together. I knew most of his thoughts, his dreams and longings. I knew him in all states of mind. Now both brothers were gone, leaving me alone. I did not feel completely separated from them, however, for I imagined that when I was up here they were still with me. I now knew what Charlie meant by saying, "I'll be seein' ya." Maybe you wouldn't understand; you have to be a flier and be up in the vast prairie of blue sky and white clouds with the knowledge that somehow God is nearer to you in order to understand that no matter how dead a flier is, his spirit is always above. You have to realize that whether you can see them or not, they are always flying along with others like them, chasing the birds and laughing at the slow cumbersome clouds as they gracefully skim through their billowing softness.

I was nearing my field now, and before easing down through the mists I looked back. A faint glimmer of sunlight that managed to find its way through the soup flashed on their ghostly wings as they turned to leave. Neither Dick or Charlie could come down to the ground. I knew I would be lonely down there, but they would always be patiently waiting for me when my eager craft would again claw its way up to its natural home. Looking forward, I lowered my wheels and flaps, got clearance, and set down.

In the barracks again, I began laying out some of Charlie's small things to send home and I came across that fateful quarter. My throat felt dry and tight as I stood there unconsciously turning the two-bit piece over in my hand. Suddenly I realized what a swell, unselfish, loving brother Charlie had been on his last day on this earth. The quarter had two heads.

HIS ROOM

By Marian Fried

A little room,
But oh, so light,
With colored toys
And pictures bright.

The self-same room
For an older boy;
With pennants and relics
Of high school joy.

A quiet room,
Its work all done;
With a star in the window,
For he is gone.

TO A ROSE

By Joanne Jeans

When sunlight streams into the garden space,
And beckons forth the rose's tiny head
Of yellow velvet, purest white, or red,
'Tis nature's own that lifts its dainty face,
And opens wide its petals to embrace
The soft, June breeze, which stirs the leaves o'erhead.
Such fragrant perfume scents its summer's bed,
And draws the passer-by unto that place.
Oh, lovely rose! you are as fair as youth.
Your tender bud is like the blushing maid.
While she grows into womanhood, in truth,
You blossom into velvet folds; then, fade
Away. And woman, too, soon finds her hour
Of life has fled, as in the roses' bower.

IF ANDY WERE HERE

By Esther Goodman

It is the sort of thing that could happen only in wartime, I suppose, when plans are made for hours or an evening and not months or a year, since the future is as flighty as the winds; and distance becomes a competitor.

Even now, when I think of Mr. Gustafson back there in North Dakota, and remember how proudly he walked into the big red barn each morning with me saying, "Well, son, it looks like a good day for us"—when I visualize again the comfortable living room, I find myself trying to believe that it couldn't be true—foolishly, because I know it is; trying to believe because I wish it were not true, and because, in a way, for a while in this war, Mr. Gustafson was my father.

Actually, of course, he isn't my father; not even a relative. We were together only a short time, and I'll probably never even see him again.

Last summer, when the farmers' crops in the state were threatened because of help shortages, soldiers on furloughs provided relief. Some of us, who had had experience at running tractors, went directly into farmers' homes and lived there until the work was done.

"You go to a big place run by a guy named Gustafson," my sergeant told me. "He'll come in for you this morning, so have your stuff packed."

I liked Mr. Gustafson right away. As we drove along the dusty road, he turned to me and said, "I didn't mean to hurry you, but the wife has a big dinner all ready and we thought you might as well get in on it."

"You didn't hurry me at all. And I'll be glad to get at some home-cooked food. I guess no matter how good Army food is, you get a little tired of it."

"I'll say you do."

"Well, the wife's made some cherry pie. Do you like cherry pie?"

"That's my favorite."

"That was always Andy's favorite when he was home. He's my boy. He's in the service, too. He's a flyer."

"Where is he now, Mr. Gustafson?"

"Over in the Pacific somewhere. He's been out there just about ever since it started. Enlisted right after he got out of high school."

"I'll bet you miss him a lot."

"Yes, it doesn't seem the same at all with Andy not around." Mr. Gustafson stared out at the road in thought. "Andy and me were always pretty much together. You know Jim—I'll just call you that—you'll be doing about the same things Andy did this time two summers ago out here on the farm, and I'm apt to be bossing you a bit once in a while, and if I happen to say, 'Well, my boy,' don't think anything about it. That's the way I always talked to Andy."

Andy's picture was on the old upright piano, and it was the first thing Mrs. Gustafson showed me after I had finished the cherry pie. When I moved in with the Gustafsons, in a way it was just as though Andy was still there. At breakfast-time, Mrs. Gustafson would always serve me Andy's favorite breakfast explaining, "That's what Andy always liked. I hope it's all right." And it was the same at dinner and supper. There was always something that was one of Andy's favorites.

And walking out to the barn each morning to milk the cows and feed the horses, sometimes I almost felt as though I were Andy, because Mr. Gustafson talked to me as though I were his own son. He told me a lot about the farm and his financial matters and how he met Mrs. Gustafson and married her.

Often he commented that I did things around the barn the same way that Andy always had. "You're a good boy on the farm," he said once.

And one night Mrs. Gustafson made me feel very good. She came upstairs after I had gone to read, and she knocked on the door.

"I just wanted to see you for a minute," she said.

"Come right in, Mrs. Gustafson."

She walked in timidly. She was a little woman and she didn't look as though she had much strength, but she was always busy at something. She handed me a sweater.

"Here's something for you," she said.

"It will maybe help to keep you warm when winter comes."

"Gee, thanks, Mrs. Gustafson. I didn't expect—"

"Don't even mention it. I didn't come up here just to give you the sweater. I also wanted to tell you how wonderful it's been for us to have you here with us. You'll be leaving in a few days now, and I wanted to thank you. You've made us very happy. I've never seen Mr. Gustafson smile so much or laugh so much or be gay at the dinner-table like he's been these last few weeks. You see, he and Andy were always together, and after Andy left, he seemed to change. You can understand that. But, with you around, he's been like his old self. And so I guess we'll never really be able to tell you how grateful we are."

"Boy, I'm the one who should be grateful. This has been just like home for me. After living in barracks and everything, it's been sort of paradise."

"I'm glad that we could have you. Good night, Jim, and God bless you."

"Good night, Mrs. Gustafson, and don't you worry—Andy will be back before long and everything will be just like it was before." I didn't mean that to be brave or boastful or anything like that. I just wanted to say it very much, because I felt that way.

"That's right, Jim." And with tears in her eyes she said, "And I'll pray for you, too."

We didn't stay in this country long after our work was done on the farms. We headed out to the Pacific, and out there where I happened to go, there was a plane that had become almost a legend. I guess there are lots of them and there will be many more of them before the war is over, but this was a special one.

I met its radio operator in an Australian town one night.

"Well, pal," said this radio operator, a thin boy from Brooklyn, "our plane was piloted by the best guy I ever met. He brought the old ship and us guys in one night from a raid when it wasn't anything except a wreck that wouldn't have been worth two cents on the ground, let alone in the air. A kid from a farm in North Dakota. His name was Andy Gustafson."

"Say, there's a fellow I want to meet. I—"

"Well, that would be a little difficult to arrange at this point. He died about two minutes after he landed us."

"When did all his happen?"

"A long time ago, pal. When the war was very young."

"Before last summer?"

"Why back in February, 1943. And there was a real guy for you. Always talking about his old man and the cherry pie his mother made. They lived on a farm in North Dakota and I guess it wasn't much except a lot of land, but when he talked about it, it sounded pretty close to heaven. And that cherry pie—"

"It's the best I ever tasted in my life," I said, and I choked up and couldn't say a word more.

THE FRESHMEN

JONATHAN JEE

It was many and many a day ago
 At a locker up on three,
 That a freshman there dwelt, just five feet tall,
 By the name of Jonathan Jee.
 And this freshman he lived with no other aim
 Than to grow and grow rapidly.

And this was the reason that, every day,
 When a senior he would see,
 Whose eyes looked down from the heights above
 And made fun of Jonathan Jee,
 His heart gave forth with a fervent wish—
 Oh! To grow and grow rapidly!

Four years have passed with the speed that they do,
 When our hero next we see.
 All stop and stare when he passes them by.
 A senior is Jonathan Jee.
 He towers o'er all, for he's six foot two.
 Yes, he grew, but not rapidly.

MAUDIE'S DIARY

Dear Diary:

My first day at high school is over. Thank goodness! I'm about to give up! I was looking for the rest of the elevators when a bell rang and everyone disappeared. I just couldn't figure it out. At noontime I wandered up to the cafeteria. There was a long line of pupils pushing money to something in a cage. It looked like a bad investment, so I went on in. A boy was guarding the food, so I sat down at one of the tables. I think I'll start going home for lunch. One of the seniors kindly gave me a bit of advice in the afternoon. He said that if I wanted to make a good impression I would rush into my class ten minutes after the bell. I made an impression all right. My teacher will never forget me. Well, good night, dear diary, it's been a tough struggle, but I won.

THE TEN-O'CLOCK SCHOLAR'S LAMENT

Hear the schoolhouse ring the bells—
 Shrilling bells!
 What a world of drudgery their raucousness foretells!
 In the morning when you're coming
 Loaded down with piles of books,
 Though the teachers scold for running,
 You get by with gentle cunning,
 Heeding not their "warning" looks.
 As you hurry, hurry, hurry,
 To your lockers you all scurry;
 Work your locker combination to the tintinnabulation
 Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells
 To the shrieking and the clanging
 of the bells.

Hear the screeching tardy bells—
 Piercing bells!
 What an hour of punishment their horrid sound foretells!
 Through the quiet, empty hall
 Run and stagger 'til you fall.
 Even if the bell still lingers,
 As you slide in, cross your fingers.
 Fate is waiting, never fear it!
 "Get an admit!" can't you hear it?
 Beating time, time, time,
 On the desk in rhythmic rhyme,
 To ensnare the poor late comer,
 school time keeps its sentinels
 With the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells.
 Ring the warning and the danger of
 the bells.

Hear the gallant rescue bells—
 Pealing bells!
 What a gay deliverance their melody
 foretells!
 As you sit and pray to heaven
 For the bell, you count to seven.
 Comes a question from the finger,
 While still on and on you linger.
 In your mem'ry you go fishing
 For the bell you're deeply wishing,
 Stalling time, time, time,
 Minutes seem a life-long time.
 Wipe away the perspiration, for the bells are your salvation.
 Ring the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells.
 Oh, the tingling and the jingling of
 the bells.

Hear the joyous evening bells—
 Chiming bells!
 What a world of merriment their harmony foretells!
 On the dot of four, no later,
 'Most everyone has vanished from
 the school,
 Using not an escalator,
 Nor the teachers' elevator,
 But sliding down the railings, as a rule.
 Dashing out, out, out,
 To dump your books and run about
 In a lovely world of freedom 'til the morning discord swells
 From the bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells.
 Now the chiming and the rhyming
 of the bells.

TEPEE TOWN

Good Evening, folks! Is Saturday night "the loneliest night in the week?" Do you have trouble with painful blue Monday? Come to Tepee Town any Saturday night from seven to eleven, or Monday afternoon from four to six.

You are about to hear a presentation of "Tepee Town, Tepee Town; lots more fun at Tepee Town," presented through the cooperation of the Junior Community Council.

Yesterday we left Dutch Holland playing his mellow sax in the far corner of the girls' gym. (Tired, Dutch?) Today as we look in upon the scene, he's disappeared. Where has Dutch Holland gone? Will he return? (Who knows?) But what have we here? Methinks this is a bit of local talent. A swing band! But let us wander on. In the band room we find Mr. Brilliant Brain engrossed in a gripping game of chess with Mr. Willie Win. Brain waves are thick in the vicinity. Who will be victorious? Strolling to the end of the corridor, we find the snack bar in busy operation. Will the doughnuts hold out? Will anyone choke on a coke? Tune in tomorrow.

Gracie: But, Harry, I tell you I KNOW the Girl Reserves are tops. Look at the wonderful programs we've been having. That puppet show, the Mother and Daughter Tea, and the Candlelight Ball at Christmas time. We really DO things.

Harry: We have been sponsoring basketball on Saturday mornings. That's loads of fun. Our cabinet room is a super place now that it's all fixed up. Besides we have a membership of two hundred.

Gracie: That's nothing; we have about THREE hundred Girl Reserves. Girl Reserves has Hi-Y beat a mile.

Announcer: And so we leave Gracie and Harry about to come to blows. How will this argument end? Who will win? Tune in tomorrow.

This is H. M. Baltenkorn, with your coke bottle edition of the news. Yesterday, Saturday, February twenty-fourth, the girls' gym, cleaned and decorated for the occasion, became the scene of the Southwest R.O.T.C. Ball. Life's photographer dominated, stopping proceedings frequently to snap pictures to appear in that magazine a few weeks hence. The grand march, V-formation and crowning of the Queen were the high points of a glorious evening. Scanning the news for curleques, we find that during a dull moment, Sergeant Story poured punch down the back of Teddy Proctor's dress. Didn't he like it? Or was he drumming up business for Drummonds?

Ladies! Ladies! Are you having trouble with those naughty little blemishes ruining your fair complexions? Hummmmmmmmmmm? Does your lovely face, once so smooth and faultless, look as if someone made a direct hit with a mud ball? Let Litchwell's Limpid Lotion solve your problem. Buy the economic five quart bottle, only ten dollars and guaranteed to last a lifetime. Listen to what Mrs. I. B. Yellow, of Orange, New Jersey, has to say about Litchwell's Limpid Lotion. (Quote) My bottle of your wonderful lotion has been handed down from generation to generation in the Yellow family and there's still half a bottle left. (unquote) Thank you, Mrs. Yellow, and now for today's engrossing drama.

WEATHER REPORT

The forecast says a snowstorm,
Yet we suffer from the heat.
Though now it should be raining,
Dust collects upon our feet.

Can the weatherman predict
What the weather's like outside,
When even Mother Nature
Can't definitely decide?

"Ah, ah, ah, ah, don't touch that dial!" The Happy Haven, a home for the mentally deficient, is making a special offer to Southwest students for a limited time only. We furnish padded cells in six lovely colors: "strawberry, raspberry, cherry, orange, lemon, and lime." Those receiving our services will have them "guaranteed, not for years, not for life, but forever." If you think you are unqualified for entrance, remember we have inmates of "57 varieties." Favorably located on Niagara Falls, our establishment is "99 and 44/100% pure . . . it floats." The climate will tantalize those especially adapted to wet weather. "When it rains, it pours." Upon retiring at night, our rusty, trusty, but ever dusty, blackjack will make you "sleep like a kitten." Doctors agree that exercise is an essential, so we let you "walk a mile" for it. And our inmates are all very well fed. In fact, "something new has been added" to the regular diet. We are now serving Palmolive . . . "three cakes daily before meals." The home is equipped with the walls "you love to touch," and special trap doors for use in case of fire, flood, or just a quick exit. "Why be irritated?" is our motto and everything in the Haven helps to carry out this slogan . . . even the rodents. Our homes are located all over the country. In fact, they "cover the earth." Recently, when a "patch test" was tried, it was discovered that our Haven was the one that "babies cry for." So, the next time you are feeling low, don't take an aspirin, don't try a cold tablet, don't take a sedative, come to our Happy Haven.

With a sense of accomplishment and with humble pride, we, the SACHEM staff of 1945, consign this book to your keeping, to find within it what you may of friendship, fun, and memory.
