

Folly Theater Collection (SC223)

Introduction

Open since 1900, the Folly Theater has assumed several names and identities over the decades, from a vaudeville, burlesque, and Shakespearean playhouse to an X-rated movie theater. Today, it serves as Kansas City's oldest performing arts venue. The Folly Theater Collection contains photographs, scrapbooks, posters, administrative and financial records, building blueprints, and various artifacts that document the theater's diverse history.

Historical Sketch

Operating at 300 West 12th Street for over a century, the Folly Theater has assumed various names and identities over the decades. The theater first opened as the Standard Theater on September 23rd, 1900 with a production of The Jolly Grass Widows. Described as a playhouse of "polite burlesque," the theater was owned by Colonel Edward Butler, a St. Louis businessman, and managed by his son James Butler.

Kansas City architect Louis Singleton Curtiss designed the building. Its distinctive façade bears stylistic elements—such as the triple arch window—inspired by the work of Renaissance architect Andrea Palladio. The theater was also outfitted with incandescent lightbulbs, a cutting-edge feature at the time.

By the 1901-1902 season, the Standard was renamed the Century Theater and was under management of Joseph Donegan. Its repertory expanded to include burlesque comedies, boxing matches, and vaudeville acts. Prize fighters Jack Dempsey and Jack Johnson both appeared at the Century, along with vaudeville stars Fanny Brice, Al Jolson, and Eddie Foy.

On May 2nd, 1920, a fire caused substantial damage to the theater during a performance. According to The Kansas City Star, the fire was caused by faulty wiring and began under the flooring of the west gallery. The Century later closed for repairs.

After a $128,000 remodel, Lee and J. J. Shubert of New York took over the building lease. The theater was rechristened the Shubert Missouri and opened in the fall of 1923. During the Shubert years, it became a “legitimate theater,” presenting Shakespearean plays and performers on the cusp of stardom, such as the Marx Brothers, Humphrey Bogart and Shirley Booth. The Shubert Missouri lasted until the early 1930s, when it closed during the Depression.

The building again reopened in 1941, this time as the Folly Burlesque. The theater was now primarily a burlesque house, showing striptease acts by Gypsy Rose Lee, Tempest Storm, Sally Rand, and many others. During World War II, the theater held up to five shows per day for soldiers traveling through Union Station. During its burlesque heyday, the Folly also featured famous comedians, such as Pinky Lee.

By the 1960s, burlesque had become less popular, and the Folly began to decline. After surviving as an X-rated movie house, the theater finally closed its doors in January of 1974, by then dilapidated from years of neglect. The building was slated to become a future parking lot.

Amid bids for the Folly’s demolition, Joan Kent Dillon and William Deramus III led a campaign to save the building. By June of 1974, the theater was placed on the National Register of Historic Places, and Dillon and architect Bob Berkebile began discussing its restoration. The Performing Arts Foundation, a non-profit organization, merged with Standard Redevelopment Corporation and purchased the building with funds raised from various foundations and community sources.

The restoration process lasted about eight years and notoriously involved the excavation of nine tons of pigeon droppings. The total cost of restoration was $4.4 million. The Folly Theater finally reopened on November 7th, 1981, with Walter Cronkite serving as honorary chairman of rededication and burlesque superstar Tempest Storm in attendance. Mayor Richard Berkley flipped on the façade lights. The comedy Room Service was the first performance held at the newly reopened theater.

The Folly Theater has continued to operate over the last four decades, hosting several signature series, including Folly Jazz and Friends of Chamber Music, and offering the theater for rent to the community. The theater has hosted the dance companies of David Parsons, Paul Taylor, and Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, and countless performers including Dizzy Gillespie, Count Basie Orchestra, Pearl Bailey, Rosemary Clooney, Marcel Marceau, Yo-Yo Ma, Wynton Marsalis, and Gregory Hines.
